Hilltop area compared to Churchland

By Heidi Ketter
Staff Writer

A recent study showed that in 1986 the average family size in Churchland was 3.16 people, the average family income was $36,567 and the average number of cars per household was 1.69.

What does this mean?
To Goodman Segar Hogan Inc., a Norfolk development company vying for the right to develop the Churchland High School site, this data compares favorably with data collected in the same study for Denbigh on the Peninsula and Hilltop in Virginia Beach.

Denbigh and Hilltop have already proven themselves as being able to support more upscale retail shops, according to Bonnie A. Banks, a Portsmouth Economic Development Department representative. As Portsmouth sets its sights on developing retail space in Churchland, the city can use this information to bring in tenants of a higher caliber, Banks said.

Goodman Segar Hogan requested the May 6 study, compiled by the Los Angeles-based Urban Decision Systems (UDS), as part of its proposal to develop the Churchland High School site. Sources used for the study were the 1970 and 1980 censuses and July 1, 1986 UDS estimates. It compared a three-mile radius around Churchland High School with comparable areas, according to Thomas H. Wilcox III, assistant vice president and development director of Goodman Segar Hogan.

Churchland's figures compare particularly closely with the Hilltop population, which was at 37,652 in 1970; 49,214 in 1980 and projected to be 67,686 in 1991, according to the study.

Wilcox said Goodman Segar Hogan has had experience developing in Denbigh and Hilltop and two other unidentified areas which the company picked to be compared in the study. Denbigh and Hilltop proved to be the most comparable, Wilcox said.

The study showed that Churchland could support upscale retail shops, a theory that both the developer and city officials had suspected.

Wilcox said he was not surprised by the results.

"We had studied the area before relative to other projects the company had pursued in Churchland," he said, declining to say what those projects were. He said, however, that the company does lease and manage many retail properties in Churchland.

Banks said the city has known all along about Churchland's potential for quality retail stores, but "now we have proof." She said, however, that the city's expectations may not have been as high as what the statistics now support.

"The study is another piece of information that we can use to sell (Churchland) and recruit retailers to the area" because it adds credibility to Portsmouth's changing image, Banks said. "I think the data supports the belief that the city had that Churchland is an area that has the market to support upscale retail," Banks said.

"Churchland is very hot right now," said Banks. Another area currently under development for retail use in Churchland is the former Churchland Academy site, which will become Academy Square. Harvey Lindsay Company

Bicentennial float is returned; will be ready for 4th of July

By Lil Youell

Special to The Virginia Beach Star
The Constitution's Celebration Commission will have a float in the Green Run Fourth of July Parade after all. The float with the Lighthouse was stolen last month, but has been returned with a flat tire. In the meantime, the Strawberry Festival has made their float available to the Commission.

Banners and details had to be redesigned for use on the new float which is to be decorated by a group of young people, recruited by Carol Garrison, a recent graduate of Princess Anne High School and the youngest member of the Commission.

The theme of the float will be "The real fireworks are in the document itself — read the Constitution." Permission has been obtained from the American Library Association to use this theme in commemorating the bicentennial of the Constitution, copies of which will be distributed during the parade.

Seven lovely ladies have been invited to ride this float. They are: Mrs. Gloria Mendoza, "Mrs. Philipines of Virginia," Miss Arlene Aquintey, "Miss Philipines of America," Miss Jennifer Maggoc, "Miss Philipines of Virginia," Miss Wade, age 7, "Future Little Miss Virginia Beach '87," Miss Jennifer Johnson, "Miss Virginia Beach '87," Miss Corie Gregory, age 4, "Tiny Miss Virginia Beach," and Miss Megan McDaniel, "Little Miss Strawberry Festival '87."

Close, who attended Bayside High School and Old Dominion University, won the $2,500 prize and his photo becomes part of the Virginia Beach Arts Center permanent collection.

Virginia Beach resident Robin Malbon won the Award of Excellence for her pastel painting "Florida Still Life." Her award was worth $1,000.

Two Virginia Beach residents won $200 Awards of merit for their work. Donald F. Hammond's "Spring House" and Jesi Pace Berkeley's "Hidden Entrances" were chosen by the three judges in the recent competition.

Armed, and still loose

Police say fugitive may have escaped because girlfriend threatened abortion

By James D. Barr
Staff Writer

Love is a powerful motivator and according to the city's Sheriff's Office, it may have been the motivation behind a recent escape from the city's jail.

Authorities believe that Edward Lynn Miller, 23, who scaled a 16-foot brick wall topped with barbed and razor wire at the Municipal Center jail on Tuesday morning, June 16, may have done so to see his girlfriend, Erica Anne Evans.

"Supposedly, she is pregnant," said Deputy Sheriff Maxine Clarke. Clarke said from what they can tell, Miller escaped to see Evans because she told him she was going to get an abortion.

Hours after Miller was found missing, officials contacted Evans at her apartment. She assured them she would call the police if he heard from Miller.

Later that afternoon, her roommate reported that Evans met with Miller and had not been seen since.

— Deputy Sheriff Maxine Clarke on the search for escapee Edward Miller.

Police are not sure if Evans helped Miller in the escape from the jail though they believe they are now together. Details surrounding the escape are still under investigation.

Clarke said, "we're getting bits and pieces" of evidence, adding that the Sheriff's Office has followed up on a few calls but has nothing concrete to work on at this point.

"He's got a lot of connections," said Clarke. "The more we dig, the more it snow balls." Clarke said Miller, who is originally from Front Royal, had lived in the area long enough to be able to hide pretty well. Though it is possible he left the area she said, from what the department has found out so far, they think there is pretty good evidence he is still around.

Police believe Miller may have required medical attention soon after the escape. After removing his jumpsuit Miller climbed over the fence and in the process was severely cut by the barbed wire and razor wire that tops the wall. Blood found outside the wall gives evidence of his wounds. Because Miller had to flee through surrounding fields and farmlands, Clarke said investigators believe the wounds may have become infected.

"We called all the local hospitals," said Clarke, but with so many shifts and changes at hospitals, Miller may have received help by someone who

For 20 years Beach resident Polly Pearce has helped young ladies in their quest to become Miss America

By James D. Barr
Staff Writer

Beach resident Polly Pearce will have the job of sponsoring Miss Virginia Beach and Miss Tidewater next weekend in Roanoke for the Miss Virginia pageant.

While the many contestants from around the state deal with the stress of competition and the hectic schedule, Pearce is a veteran of the more than 20 state beauty pageants.

"Keeps you young," said the 57-year-old Larkspur resident. And through all the years, she said, she's had some great experiences with the girls.

In her years as sponsor for the Miss Virginia Beach pageant, Pearce has had six Miss America winners come to the city to promote the event.

Along with last year's winner Kellye Cash, who was Miss Ten-

"Some (sponsors) tell them they are going to be winners. I never say that. I tell them to do the best they can and let the judges decide." — Polly Pearce's advice to Miss Virginia hopefuls.

"With Kellye being who she was and being from here," said Pearce, "there were more people who wanted to see her and more who she wanted to see."

Through all the headaches of scheduling and rescheduling, Pearce said, "I thoroughly enjoy it."

Pearce's first experience with beauty pageants was the 1964 Miss Norfolk contest. Having worked as a hairdresser, she worked with the wigs of that year's winner.

For the next nine years, Pearce continued to work with the Miss Norfolk winners, but in 1973, having moved to Virginia Beach, Pearce took over the Miss Virginia Beach contest franchise when the Virginia Beach Jaycees stopped.

Since then, besides working at Gloria's VIP Beauty Salon on Virginia Beach Boulevard, she 4th Annual Pungo Strawberry Festival raises $15,000 for 13 community groups

By James D. Barr
Staff Writer

After all the money was counted and the bills paid, Pungo Strawberry Festival officials threw a party to give away most of the profit.

"This may be the only festival in the state that gives back to the community," said Stuart Cake, festival coordinator.

At the final festival dinner recently held at the Pungo Place Restaurant, 13 groups were given checks totaling $15,000. In the first three years of the festival, said Cake, $10,000 was generated to give back. The $15,000 for this year's awards from this year's event alone.

Cake said all the groups that received awards "serve the community of Pungo."

One thousand dollars each will go to the Creeds, Sandbridge, Courthouse and Blackwater rescue squads, said Cake, with $1,000 going to the Creeds Recreation Center. Another $2,000 will go to the Kelleigh High School for scholarships.

The festival brought in a total of $40,000, said Cake. He said most of it went to cover the various costs incurred with $3,000 kept for "seed money" to promote next year's festival.

Cake said everyone involved in the event was proud that there were no major incidents or problems at this year's festival. Everything went smoothly, he said, not an easy feat considering the final tabulations show over 162,000 people attended the Memorial Day weekend event.

Next year's Pungo Strawberry Festival is scheduled for May 27-29, Memorial Day weekend.

Francis Land House

Old fashion 4th of July celebration

The Francis Land House in Virginia Beach is having an "Old-Fashioned 4th of July Celebration" on Saturday, July 4, from 1 to 5 p.m., on the spacious lawn of the historic house.

Family oriented activities include a three-legged race, a sack race, an egg relay, a hay bale relay, a pie-eating contest, horseshoes or quoits (ring toss) will be available.

For musical entertainment, the Saturday Serpent Society of Richmond will perform music of the late 18th and early 19th centuries on the porch of the Francis Land House from 3 to 5 p.m.

The serpent is a musical instrument shaped like a figure

"S." Forerunner to the modern day tuba, the serpent was popular in military bands in the late 18th century.

The Saturday Serpent Society of Richmond is composed of two musical couples: Connie and Philip Palmer and Therese and Robert Wagenknecht.

This unique quartet will provide an afternoon of music for an old-fashioned 4th of July celebration.

Sponsored by the Francis Land House and the city of Virginia Beach, the event is free and open to the public.

Kempville flyover

Can the intersection problem teach the community a lesson?

The controversy arising from the debate between the options at the Princess Anne/Kempville Roads intersection should not be seen as a win/lose situation. While everyone is involved in the imbroglio, speaking out for what they think is the best resolution, it is hoped that the situation will be seen in its context.

The intersection in question sits in the middle of one of the city's most populated sections. Ten years ago, it was growing fast. That growth brought on the increased traffic flow, and the current inability of the intersection to adequately handle the increase is what is being debated now.

Considering that other parts of the city are now growing just as fast as Kempville was 10 years ago, those who are in decision-making positions should plan ahead. As the saying goes, "Prior planning prevents poor performance." Are other possible sites of future traffic congestion being dealt with so that in years to come, less "Band-Aid" approaches will be necessary?

With such rapid growth, changes will always have to be made that will upset some. But every effort should be made to apply foresight to each situation, planning around potential problems rather than muddling through them. — J.D.B.

Sand

Don't count your chickens . . .

City and business officials are excited about the possibility of having an extra two million cubic yards of sand for the oceanfront delivered from a Maryland dredging project. Such a large amount of sand would greatly enhance the city's beachfront, and be a big drawing card to the city's tourism industry.

But at this point there is no guarantee that this extra sand is beach quality.

Though most people would consider "sand" of all types to be pretty much the same, there are many gradations of the stuff. Only within a certain range is the sand which is suitable for use on a beach. Sand that is either too fine or too large does not work well where waves constantly bombard the shore.

City council has already allotted $40,000 to study the sand's quality. Should the sand be what is needed, further work would be necessary to determine where it should be placed.

Considering the city already spends about $1 million every year to replenish the beach, everyone is crossing their fingers that this investment will result in a longterm dependable source of sand. — J.D.B.

Military fatalities

The high cost of security

Though Virginia Beach might be best known for being a resort city, residents know how much the community is involved in one way or another with the military. It is because of this close connection that the news of the recent Navy jet crash, and others like it, make such an impact on the city's residents.

Protecting the country is not an easy job. Maintaining military preparedness is a great challenge, especially in time of peace, but it is essential for the good of the country to be ready should the need arise for action.

In the course of such a goal, the reality is accidents will happen. The recent crash of a Navy F-14 Tomcat fighter plane while on a practice run at the Dare County, N.C. bombing range and the crash of an A-6 Intruder jet at the same place one month ago are stark reminders of how dangerous these simple maneuvers can be.

To every military family, and especially those who knew the men who died in the two recent crashes, the high cost of keeping our nation's military ready at all times has been paid. We grieve with those who have lost their loved ones over the years. There is little more we can except, "we're sorry."

Most people wish that the services of the military were not needed but we would be foolish if proper caution and protection was not taken. To those who lay their lives on the line, even during peace time, we say, "Thank you." — J.D.B.

Lottery a "vicious racket"

Editor:

The proponents of a lottery in Virginia will soon be inundating us with reasons why we should legalize the numbers racket and have the state run it.

In the midst of the sound and fury, we should never forget they are trying to convince us that a vicious racket is a proper and legitimate method of raising money and further that gambling is a legitimate function of government.

I flatly deny both assertions and firmly believe most Virginians will agree with me this November.

The girl next door

For every little boy there is a little girl whose main goal in life is to be an aggravation. For me, that little girl was named Laurie.

Laurie lived next door from the time I was four until we moved away three years later. In that short time we had that time-honored adversarial relationship.

From her perspective, I'm sure, she felt excluded from all our activities. It seems that half of my time was spent trying to hide from or "ditch" Laurie.

My friends Roger, Johnny and Matt and I had serious boyhood matters on our agenda. Exploring the unknown area of woods near our house. Seeking hidden treasures. Building secret forts and hide-aways. Who wanted a girl along on such serious adventures.

I don't think you could call us male chauvinists. We didn't mind girls doing the same things we did — as long as they didn't bother us.

It must be understood that we didn't exclude Laurie and other girls in our neighborhood from everything. There were times when we did lots of things together. I remember many a merry moment playing tag, hiking around, running races and things of like nature with Laurie and the other girls in our neighborhood, Tammy, Linda and Nancy.

But there were also times where girls, by their very presence, were a disruptive influence. And besides, everyone knew girls have "cooties" and the last thing little boys want to catch is cooties from little girls.

But of all the girls I knew in my early years, Laurie was the one who bugged me the most. She seemed to make that extra effort to do things that bothered or just annoy me. She made an art of it.

But of all the girls I knew in my early years, Laurie was the one who bugged me the most. She seemed to make that extra effort to do things that bothered or just annoy me. She made an art of it.

If a ball I was playing with rolled over near her she either ignored my pleas to return it or she picked it up and ran the other way.

If I shared a new-found fact with her, she would flatly deny it. The usual, "No it isn't." "Yes it is." "No it isn't." "uh huh," routine would go on interminably.

In most cases, our arguments never went beyond verbal warfare. I was too big for her to hit me and any attack on my part would be immediately reported to her mother (no matter how many times I shouted "Cry baby, cry baby!") and I was subsequently scolded.

The one exchange I will always remember started on the top of a haystack. All the kids were scrambling around on it and having a great time when Laurie and I both wanted to do the same thing at the same time. In the shuffle for position I shoved her over the edge of the haystack and to the ground. She cried (as usual) and ran home saying "You broke my arm! You broke my arm! Now you're in trouble."

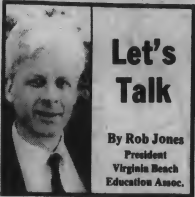

Being used to her exaggerations, I poo-pooed the matter and continued to play. No one else seemed concerned. We had all heard Laurie cry "woof" before. My greatest concern was whether her mother would come out to yell at me.

You can imagine my surprise when Laurie showed up the next day with a cast on her arm. Sure enough, the fall from the haystack broke her arm.

In Minnesota, committee of teachers replaces principals

Let's Talk

By Rob Jones
President
Virginia Beach
Education Assoc.

The headline over this article is the same headline of a news article in the June 17, 1987, copy of "Education Week." The headline sure grabbed my attention. While Virginia Beach Schools are finding ways to help principals become stronger instructional leaders, one school activities and other non-instructional duties.

The Taylor Falls Education Association voted for the plan proposed by the superintendent. Principal organizations have commented that it is a high risk approach to school management and that it is doubtful that you can effectively run a school by committee. The experiment is slated to last for three years. I hope we can find out how it goes.

While the Taylor Falls experiment sounds radical, the goal of the School Board and educators in that community is right in line with the findings of the Carnegie report which advanced the notion of giving more autonomy to teachers. In Tidewater, two groups have gotten district has just eliminated their jobs.

The Taylor Falls School District, a one-school system in Minnesota, has received state approval to replace its principal with an elected group of teachers. The school's faculty has already elected five teachers who will be paid $800 a year to meet with the superintendent on a weekly basis and help make decisions on staff development, discipline, curriculum, and expenditures. The remaining funds, that used to go to the principal, will be "redistributed" to cover the teachers' stipends and hire a full-time secretary for the teacher teams and a non-certified staff person to handle student ac-together to study ways to increase/improve decision-making of teachers in the elementary schools.

Working directly with the Appalachian Education Laboratory, the Virginia Education Association and the Virginia Association of Elementary School Principals are collaborating through a study group of principals and teachers. The group has written to all superintendents in the state and asked them to nominate a school's faculty and principal that have had participatory decision-making. The group intends to survey and interview these educators and publish a description of their models and accomplishments. The publication will summarize perceptions of strengths and obstacles to participatory decision-making as well. This study group feels that one way to gain improvements is to spread the word of successes that are taking place.

In Virginia Beach, VBEA also intends to advocate more decision-making opportunity for teachers at the schoolhouse level. Dubbed Project 300, taken from a resolution adopted by the 1986 General Assembly, VBEA leaders will be selecting two senior high schools, two junior high schools, and four elementary schools where faculties feel there is excellent staff involvement in school planning and operations. We hope to find out why these schools are successful and spread the good word. In another project, VBEA leaders will be working with Dr. Troutman, Director of Staff Development, on the study of Quality Circles being applied in the school setting. This study has great promise.

We certainly are not ready to fire all the principals in Virginia Beach, but we are ready to say listen to your faculty because they need the opportunity to pitch in and help run the schools. When administrators are smart enough and talented enough to listen and work with their teachers, better schools result.

Dow's second quarter earnings may key continued Wall Street fireworks

Wall Street

By
George T. Stagg

Do you find yourself singing in the shower each morning? Are you leaving large tips at the coffee shop?

These are the warning signs of good feelings, the stuff that turns uptrends to downtrends.

Given the rise of 224 Dow points in a little over a month and given the fact that advances have outpaced declines for 11 straight sessions and 20 of the last 22 sessions, my inclinations would normally be to send out a few amber lights.

However, for the present, we suppose the street will continue to play the dollar to bonds to stocks game, but there is a vast difference between the April/May and the current scene.

Back then the dollar was in a free-fall with no apparent bottom and all kinds of urgencies placed on monetary authorities. This time around, the dollar is in a stabilized trading range without any crisis overtones.

The market should now digest its recent prodigious gains with the leadership becoming more fragmented and dead stocks more in the spotlight.

I have not given up on our summertime bull, but with second quarter window dressing behind us, the next major event will require some bracing second quarter earnings to be reported through most of July.

We also have the phenomenon of overseas money accelerating into the U. S. market as the dollar shows improvement. Since foreign investors tend to concentrate on blue chip issues, their more avid participation can be easily seen in the Dow Industrial Average than in the secondary stocks.

But remember to be cautious of euphoria at these levels. One analyst has said the window dressing of June could result in the undressing of July.

Sounds like he isn't singing in the shower.

Today's firefighters are better equipped for better service

Fire Safety

By Martin Grube
Master Fire Fighter

Have you ever had the experience of calling the fire department and then waiting for them to arrive?

It seems like it takes hours for them to get there.

In reality, during 1986 Virginia Beach fire units kept the average response time to five minutes for the urban areas and seven minutes for the rural areas of Virginia Beach. Many factors go into the usual response time for fire apparatus. The closest fire trucks to your home could be on another call. Therefore, the dispatcher's computer automatically recommends the next closest fire truck to send.

Many times the fire station is empty. If the firefighters are not at a fire, they could be engaged in one of the many other duties that require the pumper and the manpower to go. For example: painting and inspecting fire hydrants, testing fire hoses, and inspecting buildings to name a few.

Your Virginia Beach firefighters are highly trained professionals. They must complete a four month fire academy before they step foot into a fire station. Have you ever noticed that it seems like a long time for the firefighters to start putting water on the fire after they arrive?

First of all, all the fire hoses on the fire trucks are 200 feet long and it takes some time to stretch it all out. Today's firefighter is now equipped with a air tank and mask which enables him to enter the burning building and get as close to the fire from the unburned side and open the fire hoses and push the fire back and extinguish it.

Years ago, the firefighters would stand outside and shoot a stream of water into a window. This method was not to successful, causing excessive water damage and still not penetrating to the seat of the fire.

Teaching fire safety is another task of the firefighters. Every fire station has pamphlets, coloring books for your children and grandchildren, 911 stickers for your telephone, and its all free. Just drop by any Virginia Beach fire station and ask what you need. There is also an entire department dedicated to fire education. If you have any fire safety related questions, call them at 486-1234.

You too can become better equipped. Install smoke detectors in every room and mount fire extinguishers throughout your home and even in your automobile. Think fire safety at all times.

State awards 2 bridge contracts to Beach firms

The Commonwealth Transportation Board awarded 111 highway and bridge construction, reconstruction, repair and repaving contracts statewide at its meeting Thursday in Richmond.

The 65 construction and 46 maintenance projects, valued at nearly $99 million, are the largest number of contracts awarded in a month in the history of the Virginia Department of Transportation.

The contract bids were received in May, and work could begin on the projects in July.

In the city of Virginia Beach, 2.5 miles of repairing concrete pavement along the Virginia Beach-Norfolk Expressway was contracted to W. C. English, Inc., Altavista, for $1,017,620.

The Hampton Roads Bridge-Tunnel along Interstate 64 will have repair work done on concrete piles on the eastbound bridges. J. S. Sutton Construction Company, Inc., of Virginia Beach will do the work for $877,224.91.

In Southampton County along Route 684, repair work to a bridge over the Nottoway River will be done by Luke Construction Company, Inc., of Virginia Beach for $178,190.

has directed the pageant, recruited the local talent and then helped the winner prepare for the state competition.

That isn't all. For the last six years, Pearce has also sponsored the Miss Tidewater pageant. When she gets to Roanoke, she is the only sponsor at the state level who deals with two girls.

While working with two girls can create a lot of stress, Pearce feels the real stress comes in the weeks before the pageant when the strain of preparing sets in.

While juggling all other commitments, finding time to prepare for the state contest can be rigorous.

She has them work on their talent, whether singing, dancing, or playing an instrument, they organize all the clothes necessary for a weeks worth of interviewing and appearances, and without overdoing it, they work on their walk.

Pearce's philosophy behind all of it is helping the girls be themselves.

We want to make them look good," she said, but "we don't want them to look like models."

"By the time 12 months come around they are usually more than happy to pass the crown to the next winner." — Polly Pearce on the toll of constant public attention.

While other girls go through serious modeling training, Pearce feels it best to "forget that." She said a trick she learned to keep the girl poised and graceful is to tell them to pretend there is a "little dime in the back," she said, "It keeps them from jiggling."

Something else Pearce feels is important is not to create unreal expectations.

"Some (sponsors) tell them they are going to be a winner," she said, "I never say that. I tell them to do the best they can and let the judges decide."

Pearce said she has seen a lot of changes over the years. As a professional hairdresser she particularly aware of hair styles and how they have changed from teased-up styles to today's more natural looks.

While clothes and make-up styles have also changed, said Pearce, "the girls stayed the same."

Pearce said the entire Miss America program has weathered some difficult storms in its past but has come out for the better."

In the early 70s, Pearce was in Atlantic City when a women's liberation movement picketed the pageant. To avoid confrontations, she and all the other sponsors went to the hotels and brought all the clothes, curlers, and other paraphernalia to the convention center so the girls could stay.

Keeping the girls there the entire time worked out so well pageant officials have kept the practice in every pageant since.

Then, when Miss America winner Vanessa Williams was found to have posed in the nude prior to the pageant, stricter rules and regulations were introduced to make sure it wouldn't happen again.

"We've had to scrutinize the rules and regulations a little bit more than we used to," said Pearce, but overall such problems have only proved the point that, for the most part, the pageant emphasizes more than just the physical beauty of the girls.

Pearce said on top of liking to work with young girls, dealing with the public and having a great deal of patience, "making (the girls) feel comfortable while they are there" is most important. Sometimes it's tough on them, she said. The competition gets stiff by Thursday so she and other make sure they buy them little gifts to keep their spirits up.

These little gifts are nice "pick-me-ups" she said, letting them know someone cares and keeps them alert.

Pearce said she also works behind the scene to make sure cards, letters and telegrams arrive from back home, letting the girls know friends, family and town officials are wishing them the best.

Though Pearce said there isn't any one girl who was so much better than any other, a special time in her career was in 1974-75 when she had state pageant winners back to back.

In 1974, Stephanie Dowdy Harlebeen won the title and in 1975, Joan Grady Gardner wore the crown.

Despite all the glamor and lights, Pearce said, "they've got to want to do this." She said being Miss Virginia Beach, Miss Virginia or Miss America means your life is not your own for the next year.

With all the appearances, events and parades, she said, "by the time 12 months come around, they are usually more than happy to pass the crown to the next winner."

Redenbaugh wins $1,000 scholarship

Jill Redenbaugh of Virginia Beach is one of three Virginia Tech engineering students who won $1,000 scholarships in a nationwide competition. More than 132 entries were received, with 19 winners being named.

The competition was sponsored by the Society for the Advancement of Material and Process Engineering. The students had to write essays on their academic interests and career goals.

Redenbaugh, a chemical engineering major, credited her mother and high school teachers for stimulating her interest in this subject.

"Mom sold chemicals to companies, and we had fun experimenting with some of them. She would bring home samples of boiler water from the companies, for instance, and we would mix the different chemicals to see if the water would get clean," Redenbaugh said.

She has always liked math and science, and also had "really fabulous" chemistry, physics, and math teachers in high school.

Redenbaugh, who has been working at a Dupont plant in New Jersey as a co-op student, said the hands-on experience in a corporate plant has given her another perspective on material learned in school.

"You see, for instance, how something you studied in class is applied," she said, "or in some cases, not applied, and how that particular job would be carried out instead."

Hilltop/Churchland have many similarities mercial Real Estate has a contract with the city to build Academy Square, which will be a 105,000-square-foot retail space, eventually owned by the company. The Churchland Shopping Center is in the process of facade improvements.

Five developers, including Goodman Segar Hogan, are presently in the running to develop for commercial use the Churchland High School site on High Street. The 30-acre parcel of land is expected to be available for development in 1990, if city council approves plans to build a new Churchland High School, according to Gerald A. Burgess, Portsmouth's economic development director. Burgess said the commercial development of that site could be completed in 1992.

Banks said she could not yet disclose the names of the other developers. Burgess reportedly said that all proposals submitted by the five developers include a mix of uses, with three of them including some residential mixed with retail and office space.

According to Banks and Wilcox, it is hard to make conclusions about the Churchland study by singling out individual demographics. Banks said the number of white collar workers in Churchland versus the number of blue collar workers should tie into education demographics, but don't seem to.

According to the study, in 1986, the highest percentage of the Churchland population was white collar workers, 59.7 percent, which also ranked first for Denbigh and Hilltop. The next highest occupation category in Churchland fell under the "clerical" heading, with 18.6 percent.

Yet, at the same time, according to the study, there were more people in Churchland with a high school education, 34.6 percent, and only 15.5 percent having four years or more of college. In Churchland, the median school years per person was 12.56 years. "I noticed that college (four or more years) is lower. I really don't know how to explain how the median school years ties in," Banks noted.

The most important demographics indicating support for high-end retail shopping is family income and population, according to Banks. The study showed that, according to 1970 Census figures, the Churchland population was 36,590 and for 1980 it was 46,896. UDS estimated that the 1986 population was 57,157 and projected it would grow to 63,471 by 1991, almost twice as many people as in 1970.

These figures compare particularly closely with the Hilltop population, which was at 37,652 in 1970; 49,214 in 1980 and projected to be 67,686 in 1991, according to the study.

Churchland's population figures are so close to Hilltop's that it "helps to boost the Churchland area as far as selling (to retailers)," said Banks. "It is well-known that the entire city (Portsmouth) has an image problem." The "concrete figures," comparing Churchland to Denbigh and Hilltop areas, "which have already proven themselves . . . helps to show that Churchland is growing," Banks said.

The family income is also significant in marketing Churchland for quality retail shops, said Banks. The average family income produced by family members living in one household, in 1986 was $36,567 for Churchland, $39,780 for Hilltop and $35,632 for Denbigh, according to the UDS study. The greatest percentage of Churchland families were shown in the study to fall in the $40,000 to $49,000 range, with 13.9 percent of the families.

Banks said many of these people are now probably shopping in Newport News, Norfolk and Virginia Beach because "a lot of different types of stores are simply not available (in Churchland)."

According to Wilcox, one has to understand general

Stihl Incorporated visited by seventy-five Finnish dealers

Seventy-five Stihl dealers for Oy Elfving Importers, Stihl's distributor in Finland, journeyed to Virginia Beach recently for a four-day visit at Stihl Incorporated, the U.S. subsidiary of Andreas Stihl, manufacturer of chain saws.

The Finnish dealer trip included a tour of Stihl Incorporated's manufacturing facilities and administrative offices. Meetings that were held addressed such issues as the chain saw, brushcutter, and power tool markets in the United States as well as U.S. cutting and tree harvesting methods.

A special visit was also made to Land & Coates Equipment Company, a Virginia Beach Stihl dealership.

Despite a jam-packed schedule, the Finnish dealers found time to enjoy visits to such area attractions as Colonial Williamsburg, a space center exhibit at Langley Air Force Base, and a walking tour of "Waterside," Norfolk's festival marketplace.

They also enjoyed a special dinner cruise aboard "The New Spirit of Norfolk," touring the Norfolk and Portsmouth harbors, and visited the Norfolk Naval Base & Base Museum for lunch with U.S. military personnel.

Before leaving for Finland, the dealers enjoyed an extra day in New York City, where they toured such sites as the Empire State Building and experienced New York's fine restaurants, shopping and the Broadway musical "Cats."

Though the push had not meant to be malicious, guilt swept over me at the realization of my actions.

I couldn't deny I had pushed her but with all I could muster I denied it was my fault. She shouldn't have been so close to the edge. She tripped after I pushed her. She should have just let me go first in the first place.

I felt lousy for weeks. Everytime I saw Laurie in her cast it reminded me of our altercation.

At my tender age I wondered how long it would be before the police showed up to take me away to jail. She did her best to remind me, too.

Once the cast was off the event was forgotten. It has been twenty years and I don't know where Laurie is now. The last I knew she was working as a check-out girl at a grocery store.

Now that I have little children, I make sure I tell them not to push their friends.

$12,000 raised for homeless shelter

A breakfast sponsored by the Virginia Beach Christian Outreach Coalition raised $12,000 to establish a shelter for Virginia Beach's homeless.

Held at the Ramada Inn on Seventh Street, only 60 of the 500 invites attended, but among the 60 were Mayor Robert G. Jones, Assistant City Manager Hector A. Rivera and City Councilman Robert E. Fren-richard H. Powell, who leads the Virginia Beach Christian Outreach, said the group is looking to raise enough funds to purchase a building to use for a homeless shelter. The group has raised about $50,000.

Powell began serving food to the homeless last year on a weekly basis from the Fire Escape, a Christian coffeehouse on 17th Street.

City council adopts water rate increase

By Lee Cahill
City Council Reporter

City council has adopted new water usage rate effective immediately which will impact the bill of the average residential customer using 6,000 gallons a month by $1.04 a month.

The increase is the first of a series of annual increases recommended over the next four years to pay for the Lake Gaston water resource project and other improvements in the utilities system.

Council Monday afternoon also appropriated $992,000 for the engineering design of nine neighborhood water projects.

*Transferred $53,000 within the water and sewer fund to provide for a civil engineer position.

*Appropriated $180,000 for engineering design for Larkspur sewer.

Councilwoman Reba McClannan cast the only dissenting vote on three of the ordinances (all except the Larkspur appropriation).

She had said at an earlier workshop that she had problems voting for a increase in the water rate to fund a project (Lake Gaston) which the public has yet to approve in a referendum.

"How do we explain that?" she asked.

The issue is expected to be placed on the November ballot. However, the referendum is contingent on the resolution of the litigation between the city and the state of North Carolina.

Public Utilities Director Clarence Warnstaff said that the city has made diligent efforts to resolve the litigation.

Councilman John D. Moss agreed that the increase in rates prior to the referendum "comes across badly," but that either way, the city would have to find some other water source.

He said that he was going along with increases now because the biggest increases are after the referendum.

Even if no more building were to occur in Virginia Beach, Warnstaff said, the citizens served now need water from Lake Gaston.

An increase of sharks at Sandbridge beach

By Lee Cahill
City Council Reporter

The fishermen and the Sandbridge residents agree on one point. There are sharks out there in the ocean, some close to shore.

The disagreement is over what brought them there.

The residents say the fishermen attract the sharks. The fishermen maintain the sharks attract the fishermen.

They have been out there all the time, say fishermen, but the non-fishermen became aware of this only when they saw the sharks hauled in by the fishermen.

Not only are they out there, but fishermen maintain that the water off Sandbridge offers some of the best shark fishing on the east coast.

The Sandbridge Civic League, represented by Moody Stallings, a Sandbridge resident and an attorney, and fishermen took their cases before City Council Monday afternoon.

As a result Council next Monday will consider an ordinance outlawing chumming, a method of attracting sharks from deeper water with bloody fish parts. The ordinance also will set hours when the fishing will be permitted.

The limitations were agreeable to both the fishermen and the residents. Council, however, will consider further allegations and requests made by the opposing groups before taking further action.

Stallings started out describing chumming. He said bait material is placed past the breakers on lines along with blood to attract large sharks. The fishing is done at night, he said, and the activity has been increasing.

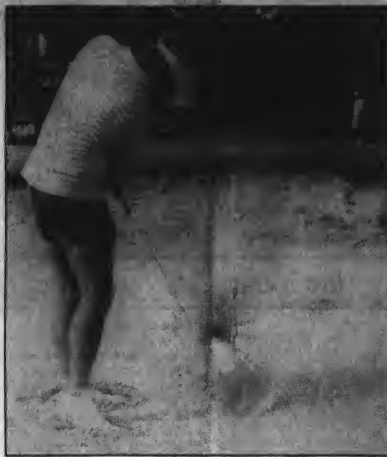

The bait, he said, is carried out by inflated trash bags so that it will float beyond the breakers. Some fishermen use rubber rafts to place the bait beyond the breakers.

He said that the sighting of sharks in the swimming areas could be devastating to the resort city.

Stallings said that something had to be done quickly because the residents were scared. He said he was told that one catch weighed 280 pounds and that several weeks ago a 400-pound shark was found abandoned on the side of the road in Blackwater.

Thomas Shell, the Sandbridge Beach concessionaire, said that in Current vols like work Museum could use 200 volunteers now

By James D. Barr
Staff Writer

Most people may think that fish don't have individual personalities, but Beach resident Betsy Doney will tell you differently.

As a volunteer at the Virginia Marine Science Museum for the past seven years, Doney has come to know some of the fish in the exhibits pretty well.

Her favorite is a pink-tailed trigger fish museum workers have named "Roy." She said it got that name because if the T. V. cowboy personality Roy Rogers could have a horse named "Trigger," the science museum could have a trigger fish named "Roy."

"If you took the volunteers out of the museum, you wouldn't have a museum." — Betsy Doney, Virginia Marine Science Museum's first docent.

Though the museum has only been opened to the public for a little over one year, Doney's volunteer efforts go back to when it was still in the idea stage. She has presented slide shows, manned booths, helped in fundraising events and has seen the program develop to what it is today.

Despite the hours of dedicated effort by Doney and others, the Science Museum is in need of more volunteers to make the facility operate effectively for the hundreds of thousands of visitors.

Right now, said Julia Wang, administrative assistant, there are over 150 active volunteers. The museum recently extended its hours so volunteers are needed to work three different shifts, 9 a.m. to 1 p.m., 1 to 5 p.m. to 9 p.m.

"It would be nice to have 200 (volunteers)," said Doney. "The ideal is to have enough to have every working when they want to."

As the museum's first docent, Doney knows just about everything there is to know about the volunteer program.

The first requirement, she said, is there must be a desire. If the person has that, the orientation and training program teaches volunteers all they have to know.

The orientation program, which lasts about two hours, gives volunteers an overview of the museum and how everything fits together. Volunteers are then given a museum handbook which explains the exhibits in more detail. From that, a volunteer chooses which exhibit to work at.

Dorothy Traub, a King's Grant resident, said she works in the "Coastal Plains River Room" because of her love for the wildlife and the outdoors.

Miss Virginia pageant this Sacrifice is worth the chance to participate

By James D. Barr
Staff Writer

Friends and neighbors will be gathering for a party at Ron and Mary Johnson's residence this Saturday evening to cheer on one of their children — but she won't be there.

As this year's Miss Virginia Beach entry in the Miss Virginia Pageant in Roanoke, Jennifer, 18, will be competing against 29 other contestants for the honor of representing the state in the upcoming Miss America contest.

Everyone planning to be at the party is hoping Jennifer will be selected for the final 10. If so, she may appear on a local broadcast of this Saturday evening's event.

Whether or not the pageant is aired on a local channel won't dampen the festivities, said Ron Johnson, Jennifer's father. It would make it more exciting to see it live on T.V., he said, but everyone will be rooting for her back home waiting for the results regardless.

For Jennifer, the competition has meant a very busy schedule for the past few weeks.

Along with getting a wardrobe together for all the activities and also going through mock interviews, Jennifer has been calling across the country and across the Atlantic in search of sheet music for the song she chose for her talent presentation.

A few weeks ago, when she heard for the first time, "I've Got a Song for You," by Shirley Bassey, she knew it was the one she should do. The problem was, the sheet music wasn't available anywhere in the area.

Finally, said Jennifer, her mother's cousin who lives in California located a copy last week. Since then Jennifer has been able to work on her talent presentation.

Making her preparations all the more rushed was Jennifer's week-long trip to Muncie, Ind., to take part in the International Thespian Conference. Though it was scheduled just before the pageant, Jennifer said it was a very beneficial time.

While there she took part in seminars and workshops which taught her concentration techniques, how to present material and other theatrical tips which are good training for being judged on stage.

Councils travel policy to be reviewed before upcoming trip

Before City Council members take off for the National League of Cities Convention in Las Vegas in November, Council should renew its travel policy, suggested Councilman John A. Baum.

He noted that travel excesses have been criticized in other Tidewater cities recently. He said that the trips benefit those who go, but that he was not sure that the public benefited so much. When the meeting is in a place like Las Vegas, "you can't help but wonder," he added.

Vice Mayor Meyera Oberndorf said that the NLC originally was scheduled to meet in Philadelphia, but that city was playing host to the Army-Navy game at the same time and decided that revenues from the game would surpass those from the NLC.

Las Vegas was selected by default, she said, because it was geared to handle 10,000 participants. She said she has never been in Las Vegas and that it is not one of the places she would choose to visit.

She agreed however, that the policy ought to be reviewed. Although, she said Council members often pay considerable out-of-pocket expense.

Oberndorf and Baum were named by Mayor Robert G. Jones to examine the travel policy.

No cush job: New VBSNA president says job is more detailed and complex

Virginia Beach School Nurses Association President Carol Flach.

By James D. Barr
Staff Writer

While many people may think of a school nurse as a doting old maid, knitting in her office, waiting for a student to come in with a cut or a stomach ache, Kempville resident Carol Flach knows better.

As the new president of the Virginia Beach School Nurses Association (VBSNA) and school nurse at Windsor Oaks Elementary School for the last nine years, she knows the many daily responsibilities of a school nurse.

"The public in general thinks it is a cush job," said Flach. But, she said, the job is more than waiting for children to come in. Flach said with a various screening test which require follow-ups, the health seminars, programs and other responsibilities, a school nurse stays busy.

"They just don't know how much goes on," she said of the general public.

While there are the medical emergencies that require their attention, Flach said the major role of the school nurse is to keep healthy kids healthy.

"For the most part, we work with well children," she said.

"Helping them to maintain their optimum level of health so they can function and learn."

The other main function of the school nurse, said Flach, is as a "health resource" person. Both the students and staff of the school can go to the nurse to find further information to help with problems. Flach said the nurse works with many other public health agencies providing assistance wherever necessary.

Up until a few years ago, said Flach, nurses were assigned more than one school, with more nurses having up to five schools. While that made for a busy schedule, Flach said now that each school has its own nurse there is even more work.

"The challenge has gotten larger now with a nurse at every school," she said. Where it used to be a lot of superficial work, now the work is more in depth. Nurses have the time to follow up on a problem, she said. Some nurses even take the time to organize clubs and develop special programs.

As the new president of the VBSNA, Flach hopes to create a stronger communications network for the 63 school nurses in the Virginia Beach Public School system.

She said the VBSNA already acts as a support group but she would like to create a newsletter for the nurses as a tool for updating them on various classes that are available, programs they can attend and other information pertinent to their profession.

Looking ahead to the rest of her two year term, Flach said the greatest health concerns confronting school children are the rising number of teenage suicides, the increase in teenage pregnancies, drug use and the need for AIDS (Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome) awareness.

She said with the help of other teachers, who are with the students more consistently, Virginia Beach school nurses are working hard to recognize and deal with the health problems of the students.

City school system

Dr. Melvin faces a challenge

Public education, by its very nature, has the Herculean task of seeking to meet the needs of people from many different backgrounds. In the city of Virginia Beach, the challenge is magnified because of the size of the school system.

Now that Dr. E. E. Brickell has retired from the position of superintendent of the city's school system, the man who is taking his place, Dr. James E. Melvin, has the unenviable job of dealing with the many facets of the position and the many factions that seek his favor. The office that Dr. Brickell grew into, Dr. Melvin assumed lock, stock and barrel the day he arrived.

Beach residents can expect a "honeymoon" of sorts with the incoming superintendent, but with a new person comes new ideas — and with new ideas comes the possibilities of conflict. As Dr. Brickell said, "you don't please people when you decide something."

Both rivals and supporters looking back at Brickell's tenure see his many achievements. For the last 19 years, one of the most outstanding features of Dr. Brickell's time in office was that he was able to stay in office that long. Anyone who is able to weather the controversies and conflicts for so many years deserves respect.

For Dr. Melvin, taking on the challenge may be more like a baptism by fire. Though people may say they won't try to compare him with his predecessor, there has been no one else for 19 years.

Virginia Beach can be proud of its school system. Through all the city's growth, the political maneuvering and working out the wrinkles in the system, Virginia Beach has emerged with one of, if not the best, school systems in the state and nation.

While Dr. Brickell leaves the job with all his experience that allowed him to make decisions with a long-term view, Dr. Melvin will be coming in with a fresh perspective and new blood to see if he can take what has been given him and improve it even more. — J.D.B.

City council

The year in review

Coming of age.

That might be the term used to describe the state of the city and therefore the issues city council has had to deal with in the last year.

After last year's elections placed four new members on city council, some major issues dealing with the continued growth and expansion of the city have been confronted. Despite some of the conflict, through it all, the council has gained respect.

The "downzoning" of 2,500 acres from residential to flamm use continues to have repercussions. A recent Supreme Court decision, saying improper downzoning may be seen as unconstitutional "taking" of land, may have an effect on this decision. What has proved to be a controversial move by council in its own right may become more controversial in the future.

Council took another bull by the horns in its decision this spring to ban all new billboards and called for reductions on the maximum size and height of business signs. What really caused debate was council's banning of the overhanging signs on the resort strip.

Many are looking forward to next May when the mayor will be elected directly by the voters for the first time. No one has announced their candidacy for the office but the contest may be a hot one.

The voter's approval of bond referendums which required a tax increase was interpreted as an approval of the council's growth/no growth decisions. The bonds will be paying for new roads and schools to meet the needs of the growing city.

Council has also been sensitive to help the city grow as a whole. Water and sewer lines have been approved for 51 neighborhoods that were served by septic tanks and wells. Council also approved using city money to improve "target" neighborhoods where there has been a loss of federal help.

Knowing the health of the tourist industry affects the rest of the city, major efforts have been made by city council to widen the city's beaches. Once the council made the effort to do so they faced a barrage of questions concerning which beach had priority.

Many wish they knew what issues will confront the city council in the next 12 months. There are few decisions that are cut and dried so city residents can pretty much expect more of the same for the year to come. — J.D.B.

Fees for the entire series is $8 for museum members and $12 for non-members. There are no single day registrations.

Participants are required to provide their own transportation to the program site — except the Norfolk School of Boatbuilding.

Registration fees must be paid by Wednesday, July 22. The tour is limited to 35 people.

The schedule is as follows:

Virginia Beach Maritime Historical Museum/Introduction, July 27; Old Donation Episcopal/Sea Stories, July 28; Norfolk School of Boatbuilding/Wooden Boatbuilding, July 29; Upper Wolfbane/Songs of the Sea, July 30; and Seashore State Park/The Life of a Waterman, July 31.

There is a strange phenomenon that occurs in households with small children — parents stop talking in complete sentences.

Actually the sentences are not really incomplete, parents just find it necessary to spell out certain words. Science has yet to adequately define this unique occurrence.

Typically, the scene is something like this. Two educated adults are sitting around the dinner table with their children. The family conversation is going on just fine. The usual talk of the day's activities develops, compliments on the food are given and the "how'd your day go dear" routine follows.

Usually, as the meal is nearing an end, the husband might say "Is there any d-e-s-s-e-r-t tonight?"

Oh, I think so," says the wife. "How about i-c-e-c-r-e-a-m?"

Yum, sounds good," the husband replies. "Let's wait until l-a-t-e-r."

Most children hear spelled-out words better than normal conversation. After having been told to pick up their toys two or three times, a child, who is down the hall and around a corner will hear on parent say to the other, "is it time for a s-n-a-c-k?"

Meanwhile the kids are looking at the parents like they are from outer space. Mommy and Daddy seem to be reverting educationally!

Then, later in the evening, as the kids begin to show signs of tiredness, the parents look at each other and say, "Think it's time for b-e-d?"

"It's about that time. Do they need a b-a-t-h?" usually follows.

As the father of a 3-year-old, I have only recently succumbed to this developmental malady. And, in talking with my friends who have small children, I have found that I am not alone.

In comparing notes, I have found these facts.

•The words spelled out rarely go beyond two syllables.

•The same words, like b-e-d, t-h-r-e-e, s-p-a-n-k, and c-a-n-d-y are the ones spelled out. There doesn't seem to be a need for too many others.

•There is little educational emphasis on the part of parents. It is not an attempt to teach the children to spell. In fact, most parents hope that these words are not learned, at least for awhile.

•Most children hear spelled-out words better than normal conversation. After having been told to pick up their toys two or three times, a child, who is down the hall and around a corner will hear on parent say to the other, "is it time for a s-n-a-c-k."

But with the boundless energy of children, I have found this little tactic to be a simple and effective maneuver to hold that edge of authority. Children can ask you questions you can't answer and they want to continue playing long after you are pooped.

For generations, this spell-it-out tactic has helped moms and dads everywhere hold on to their dignity. And that's important when children put you to the t-e-s-t.

Reforms needed to keep quality teachers at Beach schools

Let's Talk

By Rob Jones
President
Virginia Beach
Education Assoc.

This week's article was written by National Education Association President Mary Hatwood Futrell for the June issue of the NEA Today. It deals with the coming crisis of keeping quality teachers in the classrooms of America, and perhaps, in Virginia Beach.

Last month, as the school year came to a close, many thousands of teachers left their classrooms - and will never return.

Researchers now tell us that no more than half of all teachers stay in the teaching profession longer than five years. And as many as 20 percent exit at the end of their first year.

A definitive study commissioned by the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company cites three factors that drive men and women out of careers in education: inadequate pay, poor working conditions, and autocratic decision-making processes that mute the voice of the teacher.

If the next year - and the years after - are to be more rewarding for teacher and student, for community and nation, we must change these conditions. Dramatically. Immediately.

Improved salaries must be priority number one. Today the average teacher salary has yet to reach $27,000. This average leaves teachers with less real buying power than we enjoyed a decade ago.

What should experienced teachers be earning? Men and women who devote their careers to education should expect salaries commensurate with other highly trained, highly specialized professionals.

Experienced teachers ought to be earning salaries in the $45,000 range and higher.

But raising salaries alone will not ensure an adequate corps of highly qualified teachers.

Most people who enter education are driven by a deep commitment to serving the youth of this nation - and most leave because they feel their efforts to serve are hopelessly frustrated by humiliating regulations and degrading working conditions.

Every recently issued national report on American education states that real reform will language unless and until these conditions change - until teachers acquire the latitude and authority to use their own judgment in determining how best to meet the needs of their students.

During the early years of the current education reform movement, state after state and school district after school district insisted on top-down reforms that intensified precisely the problems they were designed to alleviate.

Policy-makers confused more structured education with improved education. That's serious confusion.

Today the education reform movement is working to redirect itself toward more carefully considered reforms. And the nation's most respected education policy planners are working to give teachers an effective voice in the design of those reforms. The principle now gaining currency is that teaching is an art form that in no way benefits from unbending control by central authorities.

Picasso in handcuffs suggests an image that captures the plight teachers have for too long endured.

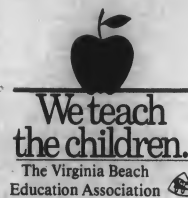

The handcuffs must go.

As Choosing Equality, the excellent prescription for educational change published by the New World Foundation, maintains, "What makes good teachers good is not some mystical talent, but a voice in shaping the conditions and consequences of their work."

The education reform movement has reached a critical juncture. If the teachers who enter our classrooms next September are to find a setting that invites rather than disdains creativity, that facilitates rather than frustrates their professional aspirations, teacher empowerment must become a reality.

Only when we unclench the hands of the "Picassos of teaching" can we expect our new young colleagues to choose a lifetime commitment to America's children rather than a quick exit from the profession.

You can be looking for Dow 2500 before Armageddon comes

Wall Street

By
George T. Stagg

Welcome back to the second half where the theme is, "Don't let them take it away."

While the first half scorecard of plus 27 percent in the Dow is enough to make the eyes watery, the bulk of that advance came in the first three months.

The second quarter was volatile and the advance since mid-May now looks in some danger.

However, while the end of the last quarter fun and games had it's usual influence, we think Armageddon will be a little late this year.

First of all, the period surrounding the Independence Day break had a reliable seasonal bias.

Second, the fundamentals seem supportive, including a stable dollar, a muddling economy and an even-keeled monetary policy.

Finally, we are coming to a period of profit reports that appear promising.

Back in the days of Christopher Columbus, the conventional wisdom was that a ship sailed straight ahead and then fell off the edge of the earth.

That's kind of what we are getting around Wall Street and the first half of 1987. We cruise along to the first week of July and then, POW, right in the kisser.

Admittedly, there is a summer-time shakeout of some magnitude in our future, but I think any real haircut comes from the sunny side of Dow 2500.

At this time, any setback can be viewed as a necessary part of an ongoing bull market. No one has been able to repeal the laws of physics and in order to take two steps forward, you often have to take one step back.

Any shake out phase is likely to be followed by a bullish renaissance and investment accounts would be advised to ride through this period and even look for additional opportunities.

Congress returns from recess this week to continue the battle of the budget as Democratic leaders try to force a strategy to avert a veto by President Reagan on any tax increase.

Of course, the big event is the return of the Ollie North Show - Part II.

For now, it looks like in the game of greed and fear, greed continues to have control of the game, but fear is warming up in the bullpen.

Arts and Entertainment

Three exhibits sponsored by the Virginia Beach Arts Center

Special Exhibit

The Virginia Beach Arts Center will present an exhibition of black and white drawings by three artists July 11 through 16.

"Three Realists From the Fenwick" is cooperatively organized with the Fenwick Gallery in Washington, D.C.

All works are made with the simple materials of charcoal or pencil on white paper. Concentrating on the human figure, the exhibition is a showcase for draftsmanship skills and rendered detail.

Two of the artists are experimenting with variations on straight realism, integrating more intellectually complex approaches into their works.

Roger Essley shows charcoal scenes of childhood activity and a series of family portraits. He has achieved nostalgic and mysterious views by overlaying realistic childhood scenes with window-like and reflective shapes.

While these works show familiar subjects used by many artists, Essley's approach clouds the nostalgic views. His manner of smearing and erasing charcoal results in a stained glass or "cubistic" effect.

New York artist Joseph Piccillo has achieved renown for his muscular horse drawings. Dramatically lit works by Piccillo are included in "Three Realists From the Fenwick."

His subject focus has shifted, however, from horses to the black male nude.

Piccillo, whose works are in the collections of the Museum of Modern Art and the Metropolitan Museum of Art, also explores exterior surfaces in a series of gridded portraits.

The portraits alternate with unexplained realistic surfaces, such as a leather jacket.

Charlottesville artist Tim O'Kane skillfully draws the human figure in a highly-detailed style. The various figures are in mood, interior scenes and outdoor environments.

Each pencil scene is crafted with hundreds of small strokes. O'Kane's works are similar to both photo-realistic and traditional academic approaches to figure drawing.

"Three Realists From the Fenwick" is part of an intermittent series of cooperative exhibitions with leading galleries and museums being initiated by the Virginia Beach Arts Center.

The gallery is free and open to the public and located at 1711 Arctic Avenue, three blocks from the oceanfront.

Virginia Beach photographer Kevin M. Gorman will display large-format color prints through Aug. 3 at the Municipal Gallery, a satellite space for art sponsored by the Virginia Beach Arts Center.

Located in the second floor corridor of the Virginia Beach City Administration Building, the gallery is free and open to the public.

Gorman is a senior photographer for the Veteran's Administration in Hampton, Va. He holds a B.A. in visual communications, and A.S. in industrial photography, and has successfully completed an internship in biomedical photography at Southern Illinois University School of Medicine.

Since 1981, Gorman has operated "Specialized Photography," a freelance business emphasizing architectural and interior design photography and custom photo decor. He has won numerous awards and honors for his work in the biomedical and architectural photography fields.

Gorman is concerned with technical excellence in his personal work and chooses large-format cibachrome photography in which to express "the serene and simplistic beauty in man and nature." The works on view are landscape pieces.

Municipal Gallery hours are Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. It is located at North Landing Road and Courthouse Drive.

Call the Virginia Beach Arts Center at 425-0000 for further information.

Mixed Media Paintings

Mixed media paintings and prints by Norfolk artist Cathy Garrenton will be on display through Aug. 3 at the Humana Gallery. The gallery, a satellite space for local art sponsored by the Virginia Beach Arts Center, is free and open to the public.

Located in the dining room of Bayside Humana Hospital, its hours are Monday through Saturday, 7 a.m. to 6 p.m.

How families, friends make community work for older people

For most Virginia each, Chesapeake and Portsmouth seniors, companionship and security are vital to their sense of well being, yet many older people lose their spouses, siblings, or friends at a time when they need them most.

When this happens they frequently feel isolated and alone, and cut off from needed social contact. Older people who can no longer adequately care for their homes, travel easily by themselves, have difficulty in walking or performing needed activities such as shopping have the added problem of losing at least part of their independence.

Such older people can benefit from a variety of services which community organizations can develop. While many of these are supported by local and national organizations, such as Altrusa International, the YWCA, Kiwanis clubs, and the Moose, they encourage their local chapters to join with other community groups in supporting a variety of services for the elderly.

These services include friendly visitor, companion, telephone reassurance, escort, and shopping programs and are often an adjunct to an existing program which has full-time staff. Such services and agencies can make extensive use of volunteers. To be really effective community groups need to talk to each other and find out about the needs of their community's older people, the resources that in place, how to link up with interested and individuals and what untapped resources can be used to get the job done.

One of the best ways to do this is to talk to the staff of your area agency on aging. They are in a position to provide the answers to your questions. These sources offer a range of options to older people and their families that enable them to remain in their homes and communities with dignity and independence.

Telephone reassurance programs, for example, use volunteers who call older people on a daily basis, providing older people with companionship and a sense of security. If an older person does not answer the phone, the volunteer can alert a family member, neighbor, or designated agency that can check on the older person. The volunteer can also help to avert problems by asking about the older person's health and other needs, providing information about services, and notifying changes, such as slurred speech, which may signal health problems.

Friendly visitor and companion programs can use volunteers who visit older people on a regular basis. These programs have the benefits of the telephone reassurance service, plus the added advantages of closer social contact, and an opportunity to observe the older person in his or her home. Companions can also help older people by writing and mailing letters, buying groceries, prescriptions and other articles which the homebound older person needs, or by providing light housework.

Escort programs also provide companionship and security to older people. Through these programs, volunteers take older people shopping, to medical facilities, senior centers, or perhaps to visit a friend or family member. The program not only helps the older person to remain in his or her home, but eliminates fear of crime on the street, enlarges social contacts, and enables the older person to buy needed items with a trusted volunteer who can also help by carrying packages.

For older people who are homebound, shopping services may be the answer to many of their problems. Under this program, a volunteer can purchase virtually any item an older person needs from groceries and medications to clothing and stationary.

In addition to these programs, community groups can support other service projects which require more intensive commitments in terms of time and financial resources.

One frequently needed service is transportation. This is particularly true in communities where taxis and buses are not available. Community groups often have buses and vans that can be used to take older people shopping, to senior centers, or to medical facilities; or members of groups may be willing to use their own cars to transport older people. In some communities door to door transportation is provided to older people who call ahead. In other cases, regularly scheduled pick ups are arranged at designated sites.

Weatherization, home repair and improvement programs which make older people's houses less costly, more accessible, and safer places to live are also valuable components of comprehensive community service programs. Weatherization programs include repairing roofs and installing insulation, storm windows and doors which help to cut heating costs. Home improvements and repairs can include new wiring, better lighting, grab bars in bathrooms and stairs, and building access ramps, which help older people to be more mobile and safer in their homes.

Volunteer assistance to homemaker programs which help older people with housework, laundry, grocery shopping, and meal preparation can enable these programs to expand services to more older persons who need assistance, and are vitally important in helping ill older persons to remain in their own homes.

Civic and community groups that provide volunteer assistance to programs which have full-time staff usually find the arrangement mutually beneficial. This arrangement provides for needed supervision of the volunteers, continuity of service, a coordinated and comprehensive approach to meeting the needs of older persons, and helps to cover the operating expenses which are sometimes necessary.

Dr. Koop's advice

Things to do to keep healthy

I've written a number of columns aimed at improving the health of older Americans. All of the columns have carried a common, important theme: Older people can do many things to maintain or improve their health.

More than 49 million people in this country are 55 or older. In the next four decades, that number is expected to more than double. While most older Americans consider themselves to be in good health, nearly 80 percent have at least one chronic health condition, such as heart disease, diabetes or arthritis.

The good news for older adults, which I hope my columns have been spreading, is that older people can prevent or better manage chronic health conditions by adopting healthier lifestyles.

To benefit, all you have to do is follow some simple, healthy habits, like eating right, exercising regularly, quitting smoking, using medicines safely and preventing injuries. Let's review some of the key points of these important behaviors.

Eating Right. Eating nutritious, well-balanced meals can lower your risk of cancer, heart disease and other chronic conditions. It can help you reach and maintain your proper weight and help you look and feel better.

Eat a variety of healthy foods—fresh fruits, and vegetables, low-fat dairy products, whole-grain breads and cereals and lean meats. Remember, too that calcium is important for strong bones and fiber is needed for healthy digestive tracts.

Exercise Regularly. No matter what age you are or what shape you're in, there's an exercise that's right for you. Regular exercise can improve your mental health and physical appearance. It may also help you sleep better and make it easier for you to lose weight. Vigorous, regular exercise appears to have a role in increasing and maintaining overall cardiovascular health. There is also some evidence that it helps reduce high blood pressure, stress and strokes.

A recent study, however, found that many older people believe there is no need for them to exercise and that exercise can even prove harmful. The fact is that exercise, if done properly, benefits older people just as it does other age groups.

Quit Smoking. It's never too late to quit. New research shows that no matter what your age, or no matter how long you've been smoking, if you stop now, you'll reduce your risk of cancer, chronic bronchitis, emphysema and even heart attacks.

The evidence is overwhelming. A recent study showed that the effects of smoking are at least partly reversible within one to five years of quitting—even among people who have smoked for decades. Another revealed a decline in the death rate for men over the age of 50 who stopped smoking. Quitting smoking is not easy and many people may need a program to help them quit, but more than 35 million Americans have done it. And there are more good reasons to quit every day.

Use Medicines Safely. Medicines can ease pain and discomfort and improve the way you feel. They can help speed recovery when you're ill. But medicines work only when used as directed and when coordinated properly with what you eat and drink and the other drugs you take. Because older people generally take more medicines than other age groups, they may have greater problems complying with their medicine schedules. Make sure you, your doctor and your pharmacist know as much as possible about all the different medications—prescription and nonprescription—that you take.

Prevent Injuries. As people get older, they become more vulnerable to injuries. Many injuries can be prevented by practicing proper safety habits and maintaining good physical health. The Centers for Disease Control estimate that 90 percent of all injuries are preventable. The most common causes of injury among older adults are falls, auto-related accidents and burns.

Safety-proof your home by providing adequate lighting and removing obstacles that might cause a fall. Install devices like handrails, grab bars and nonskid rugs. Be careful when cooking to avoid burns. Drive during the time of day when you feel most confident, with your safety belt fastened.

Healthy older people follow these simple words of advice: Why? For a better life.

Virginia Beach ad agency wins award in national healthcare competition

Barker Campbell & Farley Advertising and Public Relations, of Virginia Beach, recently received three gold awards and one merit award for the advertising it produced for two of its healthcare clients in the national "Healthcare Marketing Report" annual competition.

Godex commissioned as ensign

Virginia Beach resident James Godex, a student at Virginia Polytechnic Institute, finally attained a goal he has been striving to achieve for four years - a commission in the U.S. Navy.

Wearing his gold bars signifying his standing as a Navy officer, Godex took the oath of office administered by Captain Jerry G. Stevens, the commanding officer of the Naval ROTC Unit at Virginia Tech.

"I'm very proud of Ensign James Godex's accomplishments here, and hope he goes far in his military career," Capt. Stevens said.

Godex was among 22 NROTC seniors to be commissioned.

The commissioning ceremony in itself was a milestone for the university. "This was the first group of officers to complete the full four-year term of training at this unit," Capt. Stevens explained. "I'm very proud of all of them and couldn't think of a better corps of young people to be our plankowners."

A plankowner is a member of the original crew of a ship or command.

Beach resident West competing in International Chemistry Competition

Virginia Beach residents Anthony West was chosen as one of the nation's top chemistry students to be named to the U.S. team to compete in International Chemistry Olympiad. West is a graduate of Kempville High School.

The Olympiads are a series of exams and other activities that seek to identify the best high school chemistry students from all over the world. This is the fourth year of U.S. participation. Last year in Leiden, Holland, the U.S. team won a gold medal for the first time, plus a silver and a bronze medal. This year's team, sponsored by the General Electric Foundation, will compete in Veszprem, Hungary, from July 6 to 15.

The four students were among 20 finalists who just completed a two-week-long training camp at the U.S. Air Force Academy in Colorado Springs.

The 20 finalists themselves were selected from more than 600 outstanding high school students nationwide who were chosen by ACS local sections from some 10,000 contenders to compete in national chemistry exams.

Jusayen wins at state VICA meet

Joel Jusayen, a graduating senior from Princess Anne High, headed a trio of students from the Virginia Beach Vocational-Technical Educational Center (Vo-Tech) who won first place awards at the state Vocational Industrial Clubs of America (VICA) contest held recently in Virginia Beach.

Jusayen overhauled all other student VICA competitors in the electronics technology competition, winning by a margin of 42 points. By winning the Virginia VICA award, Jusayen will compete in the national VICA competition in Wichita, Kansas.

Steve Mitchell, who graduated in 1986 and returned to Vo-Tech to finish his vocational course, placed first in the state air conditioning/refrigeration and heating competition. Mitchell will also go to the national meet in Wichita.

William J. Foglia, a graduating senior from Green Run High, topped other competitors in the state advertising design competition. He, too, will travel to Wichita for the national VICA meet.

Jusayen gained another honor before he graduated from Vo-Tech; his fellow students there voted him the 1986-87 Student of the Year.

Jusayen's electronics technology and computer repair teacher at Vo-Tech was Barry Bowyer; Mitchell was a student of Roy A. Hoenig, Vo-Tech's air conditioning, refrigeration, and heating instructor; and Foglia was taught advertising design by Judy Doyle.

Sawyer wins for eighth time

It's becoming obvious that you can't let Roger Sawyer, of Chesapeake, get to the front. He'll almost always steal off with the race.

Sawyer did it again Saturday night at Langley Speedway. He qualified second behind Charlie Doyle, of Norfolk, but took the top spot on the second lap and was never headed. Oh, Phil Warren, of Chesapeake, stayed close, about four to five car lengths behind most of the race, but he could do no better than second place. Sawyer simply stayed in control and pulled off his eighth win of the year in 13 starts. Bubba Adams, of Chesapeake, returned from a four-week layoff to finish third, while Chip Hudson, of Chesapeake, was fourth and Danny Edwards, Jr., of Poquoson, was fifth.

The Grand Stock Division ran a pair of 20-lap features and produced the most exciting action of the night. In the first race, Mike Sprinkel, of Virginia Beach, who qualified third, took the lead on the eighth lap and beat Buddy Dozier, of Virginia Beach, to the wire. Tony Steele, of Williamsburg, was third; Mitch Sarvis, of Norfolk, fourth and Buddy Hyatt, of Newport News, fifth.

In the second feature the top ten finishers were inverted and Hyatt, the Division's point leader, fired to the front on the second lap and won for the fourth time in the last five races. Steele was second followed by Sarvis, third; Sprinkel, fourth and Charlie Daniels, of Hampton, fifth.

Paul Lubno, of Hampton, showed why he has become the hottest driver in the All-American Division. He won the pole in qualifying and then went wire-to-wire for his third straight victory. Tommy Hoggard, of Newport News, who still leads the point race, was second with Jeff Applewhite, of Chesapeake, third; Henry Klich, of Hampton, fourth and Robert Dozier, of Hampton, fifth.

Buddy Malish, of Hampton, is equally hot in the Mini-Stock Division. He lead all 20 laps to capture his third straight race, but the real show of the race was the performance of second place finisher, Milton Herring, of Newport News. He was unable to qualify because his car was underweight, and had to start at the rear of the 17-car field. In 20 laps he weaved his way to a second place finish. Robert White, of Virginia Beach, was third with Keith Reitnouer, of Norfolk, fourth and Terry Craig, of Norfolk, fifth.

Next week Langley will try for the third time this year to host the Charlotte-Daytona Dash series. The first two races were rained out. While the Dashers will go 100 laps, Langley's late Model Stock Cars will go the same distance. The Mini-Stock Division will run a 20-lap feature, with the Grand Stocks going 30 laps and the All-Americans 20. As usual, the gates will open at 5 p.m. Time trials will get underway at 6 p.m., with racing beginning at 7:30.

Water rates have been increased from $1.62 per 1,000 gallons to $1.81 per 1,000 gallons. Recommended increases for the succeeding three years are $2, $2.30 and $2.74.

At the same time minimum service availability charges have been reduced. For instance, the residential charge has been reduced from $3.45 to $3.35.

Recommendations are for sewer charges to remain the same for the next four years.

knowledge of the environment, she said she has learned most of what she knows from the orientation and monthly seminars the museum holds for the volunteers. "It takes awhile," she said.

"You can read as much as you can, but there are so many details you pick up along the way."

Traub said she thought she might have trouble speaking in front of the many groups that come through the museum. But, she said, she got over that and now sees it as a chance to help people become better acquainted with their environment.

Doxey's enthusiasm and her experience as a pre-school teacher motivated her to develop the only guided tour of the museum. Set up to deal with the short attention span of pre-schoolers, the tour is a rapid but comprehensive look at all the museum's exhibits.

In less than five months, over 1400 3- to 5-year-olds came through to experience the museum's many offerings.

Both Doxey and Traub said, like any other museum, it takes the combination of a good staff and an enthusiastic contingent of volunteers to make things work.

"If you took the volunteers out of the museum," said Doxey, "you wouldn't have a museum."

Doxey said one nice advantage of being a volunteer is that for every 10 hours of time volunteered, a person gets a free pass to give to someone. For every 100 hours, a free family membership is given and with 200 hours, the volunteer is awarded a special bronze pin.

This little "thank-yous," said Doxey are the way Museum Director Mac Rawls recognizes the wonderful work the volunteers perform and the thousands of dollars they save the facility.

Not helping the situation, said Councilman Robert E. Fentress, is a plane bearing a sign saying "Ride Bo Bo the Shark."

After listening to Stallings and Shell, Daniel Ellison said that they knew nothing about sports fishing. He said the fishermen do not throw heads back into the water and good fishermen do not litter.

He said that the sharks will not go away and that six-foot sharks are common in shallow water. He said that he would prefer to go out in a boat to fish but that he could not afford a boat.

He said that 85 percent of the time he goes home empty-handed.

Ellison also presented statistics showing that death or injury from sharks is less likely than from traffic accidents, bicycle crashes, fire, or being struck by lightning.

He suggested a compromise limiting the time the fishermen could fish to hours when the swimmers are not there.

He said that a sign put up at the beach banning shark fishing has no law to back it.

Flyover nixed by council Money goes to CIP

By Lee Cahill
City Council Reporter

City Council has decided to do nothing about the Princess Anne/Kempville Roads intersection and to transfer the balance of the $2.9 million of the Capital Improvement Program (CIP) for improvements there to the Indian River Road project.

The action, said one speaker, reflects what the people of Kempville want.

Kempville Borough Councilman John D. Moss proposed the resolution in lieu of selecting an alternative from proposals presented by the city's consultants, Wiley and Wood. When the consultants and the city staff recommended a flyover over Kempville Road to improve the intersection to an acceptable degree beyond the year 2000, the business community, two churches and the residents objected.

Even the project in the CIP, which calls for an at-grade widening of the roads, has escalated in cost from $2,933,349 in the budget to more than $4.9 million. This alternative, however, is not expected to meet the city's needs now or in the future.

Surfing Queen and her court

In front of a crowd of several hundred spectators, Amy L. Rooks of Chesapeake was crowned this year's Miss East Coast Surfing Championship's Queen. Rooks is a rising senior at Great Bridge High School where she is a varsity cheerleader.

The four girls selected as members of her court were Miss Jennifer Steele of Virginia Beach, Miss Chris Kelly of Virginia Beach, Miss Deena Combs of Chesapeake and Miss Angie Lawhorne of Virginia Beach.

Each of the girls competed in four categories: formal wear, sportswear, swimsuit and personality.

Sal Urbano, a local sportscaster, emceed the pageant. The winner and her court will go on to represent the Virginia Beach Jaycees during the 25th Annual ECSC to be held the weekend of Aug. 28.

Last year's Miss ECSC, Marcie Brickhouse, was on hand to crown this year's winner.

If anyone is interested in being a contestant next year or for further information call the ECSC hotline at 456-1629.

Further along: Congressman Owen Pickett discusses military, elderly, transportation

By Lorie J. Gomez
Staff Writer

United States Congressman Owen B. Pickett believes now, as he did six months ago when he was sworn in, and as he did when he was campaigning to represent the second district, that he knows the concerns of Virginia Beach residents.

The 56-year old Democrat, a veteran of the Virginia House of Delegates (1972-86), ran against Republican Joe Canada last year for the privilege of representing the people of Norfolk and Virginia Beach. There are about 300,000 constituents in Virginia Beach, Pickett estimated. Since winning, Pickett has found Beach people are "not hard to represent."

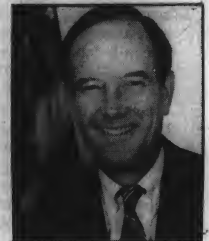

There are many ways to stay in touch with constituents, Pickett said last week during an exclusive interview with The Virginia Beach Sun.

He makes a point of talking with civic groups, interest groups, and individuals. Beach residents visit Pickett in his office at 2710 Virginia Beach Blvd. That is, as many as can get in to see him in the one-half of a day he spends in the office each week. Pickett said that he hopes to spend more time there once Congress adjourns.

"It's very important," Pickett said of his time at the district office, stressing that he wants to be available to constituents. "They want to ask questions," Pickett said. "They want to be kept informed of what's going on in Congress."

The second district congressman said that he responds to about 1,000 pieces of mail each month. "People deserve a response," Pickett said. According to him, most mail is on specific legislation that is of interest to a particular individual or organization.

"Quite frankly, looking at where I am today, I'm further along than I thought I would be."
— Congressman Owen Pickett.

The personal side of Pickett

By Lorie Gomez
Staff Writer

"I love the beach, I like it early in the morning," Owen Pickett said. "I don't take the sun very well," he explained with a smile.

Pickett and his wife, the former Cybil Catherine Kelly, moved in 1964 to Virginia Beach, where they raised three daughters: Laura, Karen, and Mary, all of whom graduated from Cox High School.

"A lot of things weren't here then," Pickett recalled. He admitted that some of the changes have been "hard to come to grips with," but said, "at the same time, it wouldn't have attracted a lot of the talented people here," otherwise, he mentioned painters and writers, for example, who found Virginia Beach an "ideal area" to practice their art forms. In his free time, which Pickett said is necessary for him to schedule like everything else in his life, he enjoys swimming, tennis, sailing and reading. Historical novels are his favorite works, especially the work of Charles Dickens.

Pickett said that he enjoys his family, which has grown to incorporate sons-in-law and five grandchildren, and gets home to Virginia Beach "almost every weekend" from his condominium in Crystal City. The Crystal City residence alleviates the hassle of a four-hour commute from Virginia Beach to Washington, D.C. for House sessions.

Pickett is part of many local organizations, including Oceana Lions Club, Princess Anne Ruritan Club, (of which he is a former president), Princess Anne Rotary Club honorary member, Masons, Shriners, and Meals on Wheels Advisory Board.

Problem kids: Toughlove helps parents deal with their troublesome children

By James D. Barr
Staff Writer

Tough Love.

The words don't seem to go together, but for some parents in Virginia Beach and even as far away as Franklin, an organization named "Toughlove" is the only support group that helped them deal with their out of control children.

Just ask Virginia Beach residents Jim and Penny Jones. Despite a host of family activities, regular church involvement, family camp outs and traveling around the world, two of their children continued to get into trouble in school, at home and with the law.

"It makes you feel like you are a total failure as a parent," said Jim Jones. Because of guilt, he said, parents can sometimes feel all alone and don't tell anyone about the problem.

Seeking help for their children in various drug rehabilitation programs, counseling services and social agencies, a year ago the Joneses heard of Toughlove.

"Usually things don't develop overnight, it takes times to change." — Carolyn Jones, coordinator for local Toughlove program.

They credit it for giving them some measures to use in their situation.

"The basic philosophy of Toughlove," said Carolyn Jones, who coordinates the local Toughlove meetings, "is to make the juvenile or adolescent responsible for their actions, to allow them to suffer the consequences of their mistakes without rescuing or buying them out."

Toughlove was started in 1978 by two professional counselors Dave and Phyllis York, whose own children got into deep trouble despite their own efforts to deal with it. The local chapter, started in 1982, is part of the national organization.

Though there is only one Virginia Beach group meeting now, Carolyn Jones said at one time over 70 couples took part in support groups. As with most support groups, she said once the problem is dealt with, there is little reason for people to stay involved.

Meeting every Tuesday evening at 7 p.m. in the Community United Methodist Church on Kempville Road, the group is only open to parents — no children come to the meetings.

"We are only a group of parents," said Carolyn Jones. "We meet together, share ideas and brainstorm."

She emphasized that there are no miracle cures. "Usually things don't develop overnight," she said, "it takes time to change." And the first change that has to take place, she said, is the parents' own behavior.

Most parents love their kids too much," she said. And kids soon learn to manipulate this love.

Penny Jones said she was brought up believing that love,

Council unanimously reaffirms "Green Line"

By Lee Cahill
City Council Reporter

In a surprising show of unanimity, city council has supported its downzoning decision of a year ago and retained the Richmond law firm of Hunton and Williams to represent the city in four suits filed against the city as a result of the downzoning.

The action, taken Monday afternoon, confirms city policy to limit growth south of the Green Line, an imaginary line which separates the rural southern part of the city from the more developed northern section of the city.

Pungo Borough Councilwoman Barbara Henley, suggested last week that the council reaffirm its policy so that council could better determine what to include in the city's five-year Capital Improvement Program.

The resolution adopted unanimously by council Monday afternoon, was not on the agenda but was presented by Henley as an add-on resolution. Even so, seven persons lined up to speak on the matter. All were in favor of retaining the Green Line and the downzoning.

They were Edward Bankston, Lou Pace, J. W. Hood, Walt Vargo, Rae LeSene, George Taylor Jr., and Diana Close.

The resolution points out that council in January of 1985 adopted a land use plan which limits growth below the Green Line. On Aug. 26, 1986, council by a vote of 6-5 reclassified some of the properties south of the Green Line from residential designations to agricultural use.

Owners of four properties have sued the city claiming they have been deprived of the use of their property.

Recently, Councilman John L. Perry, who had voted in favor of the downzoning, indicated that he would oppose it in another vote. However, council adopted the resolution with no comment.

Please see Green Line, page 10

Meetings cancelled

Council has cancelled meetings on Sept. 7, the Labor Day holiday, and Sept. 28, when most council members will attend sessions of the Virginia Municipal League.

Council also will not meet the next two Mondays, July 20 and 27, its annual vacation period.

Girl Scouts' area director loves to be out with the troops

By James D. Barr
Staff Writer

When Nellie Hayse was 10-years-old she joined the Girl Scouts. Her love for the organization and what it stands for has never wavered in all the years since. And now, 41 years later, she is the executive director of the Colonial Coast Girl Scout Council based in Virginia Beach.

While she holds the top position for the Girl Scouts in this area, overseeing the work of 13,000 girl scouts in the region bounded by Gloucester and Mathews County on the peninsula to the north, Isle of Wight to the west and Ocracoke Island to the south, Hayse said it is the "3,500 volunteers who make scouting possible."

In her current position, the paperwork and administrative duties keep her busy but she still finds time to get out in the outdoors with the local girl scout troops to do some sailing, backpacking and camping.

"I still do those activities," she said, noting that she has hiked over 900 miles of the Appalachian Trail and works to add 100 more each year.

Hayse said one thing that makes her job a little bit easier is the wonderful people with whom she comes in contact and the friendly community.

"I'd like to see it grow and to serve more girls."

— Nellie Hayse, executive director of the Colonial Coast Girl Scout Council, based in Virginia Beach.

"Virginia Beach has always been very supportive of Girl Scouts," she said. One of the reasons for this, she said, was the large military bases in the area which have a natural organizational kinship to scouting.

Hayse's involvement on the administrative level with the Girl Scouts dates back to 1957 when she graduated from Weymouth College in Massachusetts. In the 30 years since, she has worked as a field executive, fund raiser, camp director and other Girl Scout positions in Massachusetts, Illinois, Kentucky, North Carolina and Virginia.

As chief executive officer of the local council, a post she has held since 1981, she supervises a staff of 40 who work out of three offices, one located on the peninsula, one in North Carolina and the main office located on South Plaza Trail.

While it is hard, she said "to shake free (of the paperwork) and get out to the people," she really likes "reaching into the community where Girl Scouts doesn't exist and finding out how to bring it to them."

And as long as she is in the position to give to direction to girl scouts in this area, she said

"I'd like to see it grow and to serve more girls." What that entails, she said, is to develop more financial resources to help the human resources make everything more available.

The Girl Scouts are celebrating their 75th anniversary this year.

Lake Gaston pipeline

Repercussions of a delay

The recent ruling by Federal Judge W. Earl Britt for more study by Virginia Beach and the Army Corps of Engineers on the impact of the water pipeline to Lake Gaston may have more of an affect than just delaying the project.

The judge did not give a final ruling because he wanted more evidence that the 85-mile pipeline would not negatively impact the striped bass population in the Roanoke River and that the cities who will draw on the water source will need 60 million gallons a day by the year 2030.

Though the city wants to begin construction of the pipeline in the next year, this delay may put a hold on the project, pushing back the timetable of when the city and surrounding communities will be able to have a long-term supply of drinking water. While local officials may put the delay in the best light possible, the lawsuit between the city and the 13 counties in the Roanoke River basin over the environmental impact of such a draw on the river, the delay is more than frustrating.

While local officials may put the delay in the best light possible, the lawsuit between the city and the 13 counties in the Roanoke River basin over the environmental impact of such a draw on the river, the delay is more than frustrating.

Three-and-one-half-years ago, the Army Corps of Engineers decided against undertaking a more comprehensive study of the environmental impact, but the evidence they brought forward is what the judge has now found insufficient. So far, the case has cost the city $1 million and further delay only will add more to the cost.

But more importantly than the delay are its repercussions. As the city grows, the city's stability depends on having a solid base of businesses located in the community to provide employment for its citizens.

Up to this point, city officials have done an admirable job of attracting new businesses to the area. But without a steady and stable water source, a necessity for most companies, those who are considering coming here may take a second look. A lack of drinking water also adversely affects tourism and land values, the city's strong suits.

The city must now make every effort to see that the new study be done thoroughly and completely to insure that Judge Britt is satisfied with the evidence. The city must do everything in its power to bring the court case to a conclusion and thus make sure that the community's social and economic make-up is not hampered by a lack of water. — J.D.B.

State land at Camp Pendleton

Whose land is it anyway?

Citizens of the city are also citizens of the state. The land the city owns is owned in trust for all the citizens of the city.

The same holds true for state land. Though the state is to maintain it, the state land is held as part of the "commonwealth" of the people.

Thus the conflict over the 564 acres of land around Camp Pendleton. Designated "surplus property," the land in question may soon be sold at fair market value to the city. The question is: Should citizens be expected to pay for land which is already theirs?

Already, the burden of maintaining the property is borne by the citizens. While it might be argued that the cost is spread evenly to all citizens around the state, and therefore, no one city should get the property without a cost, it could also be argued that when Virginia Beach gets the land, it will then be its responsibility to maintain the property. Once the commonwealth gives up the land, the rest of the state will no longer have the responsibility to keep it up.

Since much of the land is already developed for public use and will stay that way, one wonders why the state is charging citizens for the use of their own land? — J.D.B.

...Okay, so how about you, bachelor #2, when was your last blood test?..

Special Report

Public comment welcome in police accreditation

The Virginia Beach Department of Police recently announced that Commission on Accreditation for Law Enforcement Agencies, Inc., assessors will arrive on Aug. 3, and will be available to take phone comments from the general public concerning the department's compliance with standards essential for nationwide accreditation.

The on-site assessment by commission assessors is part of the department's voluntary participation in a process to achieve national recognition of its commitment to excellence.

The public may call 427-8335 with comments from 1 to 4 p.m. on Aug. 3 and 4.

Callers are requested to limit comments to 10 minutes and focus on the department's ability to comply with the required standards.

Persons wishing to offer written comment about the department's ability to meet the standards for accreditation are requested to write to: Commission on Accreditation for Law Enforcement Agencies, Inc., 4242B Chain Bridge Road, Fairfax, Virginia 22030.

The Virginia Beach Department of Police has to comply with 844 standards in order to gain accredited status, Chief Charles R. Wall said. The applicable standards are based on size, jurisdiction and legally mandated responsibilities.

He explained that the on-site assessment follows a self-assessment conducted by the department.

The Virginia Beach Department of Police then documented its compliance and notified the commission it was ready for the on-site examination by the team of assessors, he added.

According to Commission Executive Director K.H. Medeiros, the standards were developed over a four-year period through the efforts of the International Association of Chiefs of Police, the National Organization of Black Law Enforcement Executives, the National Sheriffs Association, and the Police Executive Research Forum.

The executives who are members of these organizations supervise approximately 80 percent of all law enforcement officers in the country.

"The standards," Medeiros said, "were solidly researched, then recommended by the staff of the four associations. More than 300 agencies nationwide reviewed them before they were sent to the 21-member commission for final approval. The standards are recognized across the country as a viable method of achieving professional and effective law enforcement.

Accreditation is for five years, during which time the department must submit annual reports attesting continued compliance with those standards under which they are initially accredited. Agencies accredited by the commission are asked to reapply for accreditation during the fourth year of an accredited period.

The reaccreditation process is similar to the current accreditation process, Medeiros added.

For more information on the accreditation program, and the standards contact: The Virginia Beach Department of Police, Public Affairs Office, at 427-4097.

For inquiries regarding the Commission on Accreditation, contact: Beth Denniston, Director of Communications, 4242B Chain Bridge Road, Fairfax, Virginia 22030 or call (800) 368-3757.

Beach school system awarded $11,000

Virginia Beach Public Schools have been awarded a $5,000 state grant in matching funds for the continuation in 1987-88 of a pilot study designed to determine the effects of increased graduation requirements upon the student achievement, the dropout rate, financial requirements, and the selection of elective courses.

The study was begun in the 1984-85 school year and is scheduled to end in June 1988.

Virginia Beach Public Schools have also been awarded a $6,000 state grant in matching funds for the continuation in 1987-88 of a three-year pilot study to evaluate newly implemented K-8 promotion standards and to assess their impact on cognitive achievement, self-concept, attitude toward school, deportment and attendance.

The study was begun in July 1985, and is scheduled to conclude in June 1988.

Both studies are being financed by the Virginia Department of Education's pilot studies program which encourages school localities to develop new ways to solve educational problems.

Have thumb will travel

It has been a while, but there was a time in my life when I did a lot of hitchhiking. Though most of it was for the very practical reason of needing to get somewhere, I also found it to be a challenge.

Of what I gather, the art of hitchhiking is not practiced too much around here. I have occasionally picked up someone who needs a ride but there seems to be an entirely different attitude toward it than from where I grew up and practiced the craft.

I guess you could attribute it to this area being more suburban/urban and its atmosphere of alienation. But whatever it is, I don't think I would do much hitchhiking here either.

Now in my college days (could it be that long ago?) it was second nature to stick out the ol' thumb and wait for a benevolent driver to help me in my plight. Without a car, I was at their mercy.

Now in my college days (could it be that long ago?) it was second nature to stick out the ol' thumb and wait for benevolent driver to help me in my plight. Without a car, I was at their mercy.

Most of my trips were not of any great length. In fact, only four times were my trips over 50 miles. The rest were "around town." While the long distance trips were major projects the small excursions hold just as many memories.

On one short jaunt, everything looked good until I was settled in the back seat of an old car beside the driver's dog.

The car reeked with the smell of marijuana and it soon was apparent that the driver (and the dog) were under the influence. While I carefully scrutinized the on-coming traffic, I came up with a quick reason for needing to be dropped off at the next convenient opportunity.

I don't think I was in any real danger but it was hard to talk and hold my breath at the same time!

On another outing, it wasn't the driver I had trouble with, it was two roughneck types in a beat up old truck who, it seemed, were just returning from an all-night drinking contest.

In their state of mind (or lack of it) they didn't like the way we looked or drove and using some very convincing hand gestures, they communicated their threats. They were pretty convincing.

While the guy who picked me up showed little concern (he had a few choice hand gestures of his own) I wondered what might happen if they should follow us until I was dropped off. I breathed a sigh of relief when they went in another direction.

Now I know that there are dangers involved in hitchhiking. My days of sticking out my thumb on the open road are probably gone. But you never know when my experience might come in handy.

Mayor Jones favorable to Lake Gaston project order

Virginia Beach Mayor Robert G. Jones recently made the following statement in response to the memorandum order of Judge Britt, Chief Judge of the U.S. District Court of the Eastern District of North Carolina on July 7.

"The city welcomes the recent ruling of Judge Britt in the suit North Carolina has brought against the United States Army Corps of Engineers over the Lake Gaston pipeline.

"It favorably demonstrates the substantial progress has been made in bringing the legal challenges to the project to a conclusion.

"Although Judge Britt has requested additional review by the Corps on two limited factual determinations the Corps has already made, the city takes great encouragement from the court's ruling.

"In the first place, we are encouraged that the principal thrust of North Carolina's case, that the Corps should do a full environmental impact study, was not supported by the court.

"Virginia Beach has firmly believed the Corps' view is correct that such a study would not add in any respect to the Corps' previous detailed study that found the Lake Gaston Project would have no significant environmental impact.

"The city further believes such a study would be a useless waste of taxpayers money as well as of the limited professional resources the Corps has for the study of issues elsewhere that could raise legitimate questions regarding environmental impacts.

"In the second place, the court's action gives positive evidence that progress is being made on this extremely important suit, and that a timely resolution can be reached before adversely affecting the current schedule for the project.

"At the same time the city is not discouraged by the cautious approach of Judge Britt. So long as any doubt exists in the court's mind that the striped bass might be adversely affected by the project, or that Southeastern Hampton Roads will need at least 60 million gallons of water by the year 2030, it is appropriate for full evidentiary support to be before the court.

"We are confident the evidence will be overwhelmingly in support of the Corps on both questions.

"The city has been making in the meantime substantial progress on its engineering work for the project as well as solidifying financing resources, because we are confident the Corps will ultimately prevail and the Lake Gaston Project will become a reality on schedule."

"At the same time, the city wants to reaffirm its belief that this project will not adversely affect either the citizens of North Carolina or the residents of the Roanoke River Basin.

"The project, in fact, will have significantly favorable economic effects in the areas of southside Virginia where the pipeline will be built, and even during the infrequent periods of maximum drawdown from Lake Gaston, the impact on the lake will be unnoticeable.

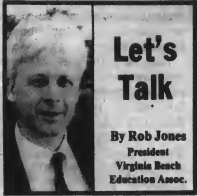

"We seek friendly relations with our fellow citizens in North Carolina and southside Virginia and very much regret the floods of the people of this area for water casts us in the role of adversaries."

"We understand their concerns and would welcome any opportunity to meet with them to fully address whatever questions they may have concerning the project."

Public libraries are a resource, not a child care facility

Let's Talk

By Rob Jones
President
Virginia Beach
Education Assoc.

This article is being submitted by Claire Polley, Vice President of the Virginia Beach Education Association.

Come with me into a land of enchantment. Close your eyes. Pretend...pretend you're on the moon, in a jungle, in a faraway land.

You can be an astronaut, a lion, a mouse, an explorer, or anything you want to be.

The storytellers at the Virginia Beach Public Libraries throughout the city try to bring alive the words of writers so that young children desire to read and will continue to pursue lifelong library use.

Librarians have organized the summer reading program which invites children of all ages to read. They offer incentives to read and a party in August for participants.

The librarians work diligently to encourage preschoolers, youngsters, and young adults to use the library. The librarians want children to enjoy the library - but not abuse it.

The library is not a baby-sitting service. After reading a local newspaper article by Beverly Shepard, I asked several librarians if they found that children were being dropped off and left unattended for long periods of time.

They all answered yes.

They expressed concern about the responsibility and the liability. They described children arriving at the start of the day with various materials and leaving at the close of the day.

Several librarians reported having to wait past closing time for parents. Some recent literature has offered the library as a safe alternative to baby-sitters.

The librarians hope that parents understand that the library is not an appropriate childcare facility.

During the past weeks, the Virginia Beach Education Association has urged parents to encourage reading. We believe active readers will be successful lifelong readers.

We have offered tips and advice on how to help your child be a better reader. We believe the summer reading program of the Virginia Beach Public Library is an excellent opportunity for all the children.

We join the library in expressing delight in those families who use the library regularly and safely.

We also share the librarians' concern about the children who are dropped off and expected to amuse themselves for several hours.

We recognize the problems of working parents and childcare needs and will continue to work on these issues.

We do encourage library use but let's protect the privilege and use libraries as they were meant to be used.

Enjoy reading and the library but respect its purpose and the rights of the librarians.

We teach the children.

Market looking for a few good men — like Ollie

Wall Street

By
George T. Stagg

If North can nourish the market 20-25 points, I wonder if we should be plotting for Poindexter?

The market reacted very positively from Ollie's opening statement when he took the president "off the hook" last Tuesday.

While we are not sure that Ollie was the whole story to last week's rally, as favorable earnings reports started coming in, the dollar was strong and the bond market was up, it seems a lot more fun to blame it on the shredder.

There is little doubt, however, that the current proceedings in Washington are being watched very closely by Wall Street and any direct link to the president could be psychologically damaging to the market.

While the United States Marine Corps have fought valiantly from the Hills of Montana to the Hills of D.C., we now await Admiral Poindexter's version.

Hopefully, the buck stops there or with our dearly departed CIA Director Casey.

Anchors Aweigh! Notwithstanding any negative surprises from Washington, we see no signs of a major summer slowdown. The economy is showing signs of a fairly consistent pickup.

Although banks are expected to show big losses as a result of second quarter write-off activity, the industrial sector should show significant gains. Assuming companies have managed to keep a grip on costs as their revenues increase, we should see a substantially higher stock market later this summer.

In any event, it's nice to have politics back on Wall Street. It was getting a little too dull and frazzled.

INTRODUCING GENTLE CHIROPRACTIC!

Hi, I'm Michael Concessi, Doctor of Chiropractic. Perhaps gentleness in chiropractic is a new concept to you. It was to me before I began the seven years of college training necessary for my doctorate degree. During those years I learned the precise locations where light pressure can bring chiropractic relief to pain. In addition to my doctorate, I have a Bachelor's Degree in Science. Since college I have completed courses in Impairment Rating, Acupuncture, Nutrition & Applied Kinesiology. Even now I devote three days every month attending a nationwide seminar on chiropractic.

If you have hesitated visiting a chiropractor, perhaps you didn't know about this gentle or "soft touch" technique. It has been effective treating:

Back Pain Headaches Shoulder Pain Painful Joints
Neck Pain Arthritis Arm/Leg Pain Stiffness
Numbness Bursitis Hip Pain Cold Hands/Feet

And, because most insurance companies recognize and cover chiropractic care, your treatment can be at little or no cost to you, according to the limits of your insurance policy. To encourage you to try gentle chiropractic, please accept this offer:

He has served as an executive vice president of Central Fidelity's Eastern Region with responsibility for retail banking services in the Hampton Roads area since 1984.

Flounders' primary responsibility in this key position will be to manage a statewide industrial development program for the bank. He will also serve as the bank's chief representative in governmental affairs.

Carroll L. Saine, chairman of the board and chief executive officer of Central Fidelity Banks, Inc., commented, "Central Fidelity wants to be in the forefront in supporting business development within the Commonwealth. We also are committed to maintaining an active presence in the communities in which we operate. Tom is uniquely suited to manage our efforts in these areas. He has in-depth knowledge of the banking industry and is recognized as a community leader."

A resident of Virginia Beach since 1979, Flounders is deeply involved in civic affairs, serving as the current chairman of the Virginia Beach Council of the Hampton Roads Chamber of Commerce.

Sports fishing is growing in area.

Tuna catch up 70 percent over last year Everything is "up to snuff" for local fishing businesses

By James D. Barr
Staff Writer

Fishermen usually tell the story of the fish that got away. But this summer, few local fishermen are complaining.

"Weather's been super so far," said Fred Feller, manager of the Virginia Beach Fishing Center at Rudee Inlet. "We can't complain about that."

The biggest change over last year, said Feller, is the increase in the haul of tuna. "Tuna is up 70 percent over last year," he said. In fact, he said, Beach resident Kitty Falk caught a 272 pound, 4 ounce big-eye tuna in June to set a new state record.

For the charter boats that work out of the inlet, good tuna means good business.

The same good business holds for local head boat fishing. Mike Davis, co-owner of D & M Marina on the Lynnhaven Inlet is just as pleased with the tuna as the summer fishing has gone.

"We've had a good run of pan trout on the Eastern Shore," he said. "And now the croakers are starting to run along Ocean View."

Both men acknowledged that the poor weather this spring was a disappointment, but as Davis said, "everything else is up to snuff."

The cold spring weather, they said, affected the water temperature just as the trout and blue fish migrated up the coast.

"We can usually walk across the bay on them," said Davis, but this year they went right on by, he said.

While homeowners are bemoaning the recent heat wave, both men said that type of weather is good for fishermen. The hot weather, said Davis, keeps the wind down making it easier, especially on the charter boats, to fish.

Both Davis and Feller said there isn't any secret to where the good fishing is right now. As the pan trout continue to migrate, they said, everyone has been catching them at the high level bridge in the bay and near the concrete ships of Cape Charles.

Dash Series finally hit Langley

It took three tries to get a Charlotte-Daytona Dash Series race in at Langley Speedway, but when it finally happened the results were quite predictable.

Larry Caudill, of North Wilkesboro, N.C., won the pole and then proceeded to lead the entire 100 laps for his sixth Charlotte-Daytona Dash win of the year. He did have to survive a brief tangle with Danny McClain, of Charlotte, N.C., in turns one and two after a restart on the 85th lap, but no one else seriously challenged the division point leader.

Mike Swaim, of Archdale, N.C., who qualified second finished second, while Mickey York, of Asheboro, N.C., was third, Andy Belmont, of Feasterville, Pa., fourth and Mike Watts, of Mohawk, Tenn., fifth.

Two previous attempts to run a Charlotte-Daytona Dash series race at Langley earlier this year had been rained out.

In the Late Model Stock Car 100-lap feature, Roger Sawyer, of Chesapeake, had a break when pole sitter Phil Warren, of Chesapeake, had engine trouble on lap 14, handing the lead to the division point leader. Given an opportunity like that Sawyer rarely falters and he didn't this time either, leading the rest of the way to his fifth victory in his last six races and ninth of the year. Bubba Adams, of Chesapeake, rode his car to a second place finish, while Joe Gaita, of Hampton, was third; Randy Hutchinson, of Seaford, fourth and Danny Edwards, Jr., of Poquoson, fifth.

Buddy Hyatt, of Newport News, appeared to have won his seventh Grand Stock feature race, but was later disqualified because of an engine irregularity. That gave the victory in the 30-lap race to Mitch Sarvis, of Norfolk. Finishing second was Tony Steele, of Williamsburg, while Buddy Dozier, of Virginia Beach, took third; Mike Sprinkel, of Virginia Beach, was fourth and Rich Hester, of Newport News, was fifth.

Paul Lubbo, of Hampton, continued his mastery of the All-American Division by winning his fourth straight race. Lubbo, who started third thanks to the luck of the draw, gained the lead on lap nine of the 20-lap race when he passed Tommy Hogard, of Hampton, who eventually finished third. Robert Dozier, of Hampton, came from back in the pack to take second place, while Mike Townley, of Portsmouth, placed fourth and John Hicks, of Hampton, was fifth.

Milton Herring, of Newport News, stopped a three-ring winning streak by Buddy Malish, of Hampton, by holding off his challenger through the last 11 laps of the 20-lap Mini-Stock feature. Neither driver drew a starting position in the top four, but Herring had taken the lead by the third lap and Malish pulled into second place by lap nine. Joe Ferebee, of Parkley, finished third, while Robert White, of Virginia Beach, was fourth and Terry Craig, of Norfolk was fifth.

Over $2,700 was raised for Muscular Dystrophy during the evening sponsored by 7-Up for the second consecutive year.

Next week the dirt cars invade Langley after having been rained out earlier in the season. They will run a 35-lap event, while Langley's Late Model Stock cars will run 50 laps, the Grand Stock's 30 as well as the Mini-Stocks, and the All-Americans will race 20-laps. Gates will open at 5 p.m., with qualifying beginning at 6 and racing starting at 7:30.

Toughlove helps parents especially with children, was a matter of forgiving and forgetting. In their case, that view only aggravated the situation. Their son, she said, was never sorry for his misbehavior which escalated to vandalism. He only took advantage of them.

Penny said she was always "trying to solve his problems rather than letting him deal with it."

Toughlove, she said, taught her that love is not allowing a child to get out of control. Being tough is different than being mean, she said, but there comes a time when a parent must stand up to a child's actions.

When "toughlove" is put into action, said Carolyn Jones, it sometimes means encouraging parents to go through the legal system to deal with the more serious problems, especially if the child is under 18.

"It lets them see they made a mistake that will cost," she said. When the child sees that mom and dad aren't to cover for them anymore, it shakes them up.

"Kids have a built-in support group in school," said Jim Jones. "Parents however, don't have the reinforcement. They don't want to admit the problem."

And when there is all that pressure in the home, he said, many times the husband and wife are not too much help to one another.

Once the child reaches 18-years-old, said Carolyn Jones, the legal system takes over and if the parent hasn't taught the child to be responsible, it is too late.

Looking back at their own situation, Jim and Penny Jones realized they let things get out of hand.

Though he thought he was doing all the right things with his children, Jim Jones said, "I abdicated the responsibility of the household to my wife. It was easier to hide in my work. It was not only did that place all the burden on the wife, he said, but instead of nipping it in the bud, the problem only grew worse.

Soon, he said, for his kids, "being a part of the other misfits became more important than the love of parents." The effect went even deeper, he said, when the rebellion of his son started negatively influencing his daughter.

Only now, seven years later, he said, are he and his wife straightening out some of the problems they helped create. The son is 18-years-old and on his own and the daughter he said, has made "some major turn-arounds."

There are a lot of parents that are too tired," said Penny Jones. "I'm always surprised that there aren't more people at the meetings knowing so many parents are out there who have troubled children."

Not all our successes are full successes, said Carolyn Jones. For some families, she said, progress is measured in small ways.

Carolyn Jones related a story of one family whose daughter, at age 14, was already a runaway, into drugs, living a promiscuous life-style and did not respond to any other program. She and her parents are working through some things for the first time in years.

There are still problems, said Jones, and though it may not look like much to some, it is a beginning.

Interview with Owen Pickett

and the Chesapeake Bay.

Military concerns
Realizing that his district is brimming with military personnel, active duty and retired, Pickett said that he desired to be on the House Armed Services Committee.

The representative from the second district has been on that committee for the past 40 years, Pickett said, because of the large military concern in the district. The tradition was continued when Pickett, like his second district predecessors, was named to the committee.

As part of the personnel subcommittee within the Armed Services Committee, Pickett is touring the country with other subcommittee members, listening to military personnel, dependents, and retired military personnel, gathering information with the hope of garnering ideas for workable improvements in military benefits for personnel. Findings will influence the budget for 1989.

One concern which has already come to light, according to Pickett, is the "contracting out" of medical care through the CHAMPUS system, rather than expanding Navy medical facilities. "It may cost (the government) more," Pickett said, to contract series out.

As far as representing his military constituents in Congress, Pickett said "when issues come up, you reflect on what you've heard." According to Pickett, he has "a lot of dialogue with military in and out of (second) district."

Regarding local military concerns, Pickett said, "I've heard more about health care than anything else." Many of his military constituents say that the Navy, especially, is not providing what it promised, Pickett said.

His fellow congressmen also want a strong defense, Pickett said, and he thinks that most realize that the key to a strong defense is the personnel. Therefore, Pickett said that he believes Congress will do all it can for military personnel given budget restrictions.

The area's elderly

the large amount of young people moving to the Beach, but is also cognizant of the area's older population. Pickett said that older residents are "concerned about cost of living adjustments," a subject which Pickett tries to stay on top of, and which he considers "a fairness issue." According to Pickett, the new budget adopted by the House of Representatives makes strides in the direction of fairness.

Beach transportation
"Extremely poor" is Pickett's prognosis on the Virginia Beach transportation system. He said that he is hoping for two things. One, he said, "that we could have a mass transit system," and two, "that people would use it."

Effectiveness in Congress
Concerning his effectiveness in Congress, Pickett said, "Quite frankly, looking at where I am today, I'm further along than I thought I would be." By that, Pickett refers to the fact that people are coming in to talk to him, and writing to him about their concerns. He said that he is one of the congressmen that is active in his committee, which, he said, is a very good attendance rate.

He has spoken before Congress, once on the G.I. Bill, another time on Dr. E. E. Brickle, Virginia Beach School Superintendent's retirement to recognize the contribution to the area. Said Pickett, though you certainly realize you are the junior guy, "you realize that they (the other congressmen) are people like you."

Pickett said that he feels that being effective in federal government is "a matter of getting to know the other people" in government. Delegates are elected every two years, not enough time, Pickett said, to get a lot of work done for a district. "I want to try and stay there, get some seniority," Pickett said, that, he said, is when the constituency can best be served.

Council considers hurricane protection plan for beaches

By Lee Cahill

City Council Reporter

Beach protection plans in the main resort area and in Sandbridge under consideration by city council would cost approximately $69 million with the city expected to pay 35 percent of the cost or close to $25 million.

A $40 million seawall rising 15.7 feet above the mean sea level has been proposed by the U.S. Corps of Engineers as a way to protect the boardwalk and the hotels from the ocean's encroachment.

The wall would be constructed from Rudee Inlet to 59th Street four to 15 to 30 feet east of the present boardwalk. The resort area north of 59th Street would be protected under the plan by a build-up of the dunes.

The Corps also has agreed to come up with a plan for Sandbridge Beach. Using a beach fill rather than a seawall, the project would offer the same degree of protection against a 54-year storm, that is, a storm that has a two percent chance of occurring in any one year or a 100 percent chance of occurring once in 54 years.

The Sandbridge project would cost approximately $29 million of which the city's share would be $10 million to $11 million.

In conjunction with the sand replenishment program at Sandbridge, council Monday transferred $50,000 within its Capital Improvement budget to finance the title work necessary to declare Sandbridge Beach a potential spoil site/sand replenishment area.

Last November, council passed a resolution requesting the Corps to declare all of the beaches of Virginia Beach, including Sandbridge, disposal sites for beach quality sand from the deepening and dredging of the Norfolk Harbor and channels and the Baltimore Harbor project.

Carl Thoren, from the city engineer's office, describing the seawall proposal at a workshop Monday morning, said that the city's share of the cost would be 35 percent of $14 million.

He said the Corps has agreed, at the city's request, to look at a design that would include the placement of four to five feet of sand on the beach so that the top of the wall can be lowered.

The present design does not include increasing the elevation of the sand. The sand fill also would add 150 feet to the beach width.

A disadvantage of this proposal, Thoren said, is that the interior storm drainage system would have to be redesigned. The current design provides for drainage to pass through the wall into the ocean. Building up the sand would necessitate drainage landward.

"Where?" asked Councilwoman Nancy Parker who lives near the Rudee Inlet area.

The Corps envisions starting the project on Sept. 15, 1989 and finishing in three years.

The Corps has asked the city to give its approval of the concept by December of this year. February 1989 has been established as the date when the city will enter an agreement with the Corps to share in 35 percent of the cost.

Thoren said the Corps will have spent $2 million on the design by the end of September. The city will be expected to share in this cost also on the same 65/35 percent basis, Thoren said.

The only openings in the wall to the beach will be at the street ends. The openings will be seven-feet wide. The overlooks built at 13th, 14th and 15th streets as part of the city's beachfront beautification plan conflict with the seawall design. Thoren said also that the Resort Area Advisory Committee (RAAC) is aware of the seawall proposal and should be asked to hold contracts on future improvements which may also conflict.

Thoren said that a briefing will be held on July 23 with RAAC. Councilman Robert E. Fentress asked that hotel and motel representatives also be invited to the session.

Assistant City Manager Dean Block said that by October the money for the project can come only with referendum approval under the city's spending policy.

Memorial Day to Labor Day

Shark fishing banned from beaches

By Lee Cahill

City Council Reporter

Shark fishing has been banned from all the ocean and bay beaches in Virginia Beach from Memorial Day weekend through Labor Day weekend.

An ordinance approved Monday afternoon by city council unanimously restricts fishing within 500 yards of the mean low water lines of the shore areas. Also forbidden is the placing of any chum, blood or free floating bait to attract sharks.

The prohibitions extend to fishing or chumming from any beach, structure, jetty or boat, utilizing tackle, bait or chum intended to catch or attract sharks. Sandbridge residents have complained that shark fishing from the public beach at Sandbridge has attracted sharks to an area where thousands of swimmers come each year.

Council had been prepared to consider an ordinance limiting the shark fishing hours to nighttime and forbidding the use of chum to attract the fish. However, Sandbridge residents and Councilwoman Barbara Henley Monday exhibited hooks (about five inches long) and heavy lines used for shark fishing which had been found by swimmers. The danger presented by the hooks compounded the problem for residents and council. Residents, who had been amenable to a compromise, asked for a complete ban of the fishing.

Henley suggested that the city consider ways in which the shore fishermen could pursue their hobby. They fishermen had suggested the city allow the pier at Little Island Beach at the south end of Sandbridge to remain open 24 hours-a-day to accommodate the shark fishermen.

Councilman Harold Heischberger suggested he ban the potential liability of the city in case of bodily injury. He added that fear is fear. The Sandbridge people are afraid. Whether the fear is justified is beside the point.

The ordinance, Heischberger said, can be amended later to exempt the Federal Wild Life Refuge or the False Cape State Park area, although those areas are inaccessible by motor vehicles which would be needed to haul the fish away.

Councilman Robert E. Fentress also asked that the city study laws in other states that don't permit fishermen to dump fish remains after cleaning their catch into the ocean. The shark fishermen had pointed out that the "chumming" actually is permitted by this practice at the main resort area pier.

Also, the speakers were asked only whether or not they supported the resolution. When each in turn indicated they supported the resolution, they were not asked to elaborate.

The swift and unanimous action led to conjectures that the matter had been discussed in an executive session which extended into the regular formal session time by 15 or 20 minutes.

The resolution addressed two points — that the council would not recommend any further action on the Aug. 26 decision, allowing it to remain, and that the city attorney's office and Hunton and Williams be directed to proceed with litigation to the extent necessary.

Last year's vote on the down-zoning was along political lines. Council members who supported Robert G. Jones for mayor voted for the down-zoning and those against had supported Reba McClanahan.

Blackwater Borough Councilman John A. Baum, who had been on the opposing side last year, seconded the motion on Monday.

Henley said last week that a reaffirmation was needed so that the city could provide for the services which would be needed if development were to be extended south of the Green Line. She said that council would be talking about roads and schools instead of recreation centers.

Kempsville flyover is scuttled

Muehlenbeck had requested council to select an alternative or to delete the project and transfer the money to another project.

The resolution adopted by a vote of 8-2 Monday afternoon, retains the project among the unfunded projects. The $2.9 million, minus money already spent on engineering, will be used for land acquisition for the widening of Indian River Road from Ferrell Parkway to Lynnhaven Parkway.

Councilman John A. Baum who voted against the resolution, said he was more concerned about the procedure. "I wonder how we're going to get to the point where any projects will be accomplished." He said council should be interested in the minimum adverse effect on the public, but that the city is wasting money hiring a consultant when it doesn't accept the recommendations.

Moss said that he was informed about the flyover proposal by a newspaper article. Imagine how a new borough councilman would feel when he is not informed about a project of that scope before the newspaper. He said he regretted, too, that the city had spent money, but that things had to be balanced. "I hope I never read again about a project (for the first time) in the newspaper," he said.

O. W. Richardson, a Kempsville resident, said that the community did not need an overpass and that council should put the money back in the general fund. He said that people were concerned about "certain people on council, specifically Baum," and that the resolution "reflects what the people in Kempsville want."

Councilwoman Nancy Parker, who also voted against the resolution, explained that while she was not in favor of the flyover, she thought something was needed. She said she was concerned about leaving the project unfunded.

Councilwoman Reba McClanahan abstained because of an interest in property in the area.

At an earlier workshop, Moss suggested designating one percent of the city's annual operating budget to land acquisition.

Mayor Robert G. Jones said that he would like to see a project put together.

Councilman Robert E. Fentress said the city has to be ahead of the private sector, acquiring land before development.

Moss' resolution also stated that the historic character and rich history of downtown Kempsville would be lost if the city decided upon the flyover and that the disruption to adjoining neighborhoods and the loss of businesses would be extensive and costly.

4-H Riding for the Handicapped program has "Fun Day Event" at Oceana stables

The Virginia Beach 4-H Riding Program for the Handicapped recently held a "Fun Day Event" at NAS Oceana Stables.

Activities included the participation of Rosemary Larkin, a member of the Virginia Beach Mounted Patrol, in games with the mounted riders, a hayride, presentation of award ribbons and a recognition of the many volunteers who helped the program work.

Since 1984, the program has operated. Six riders per class require three volunteers per rider. Running for eight consecutive Saturdays in the fall and spring, the program depends on the commitment of volunteers, said Kelly Weatherly, 4-H urban technician.

The disabilities of the riders range from severe mental handicaps to emotional, visual and hearing impairments.

For further information, contact the 4-H office of the Department of Agriculture of Virginia Beach at 427-4617.

Student exchange program names Beach residents as coordinators

Teresa N. Rapp, of the King Grant section of Virginia Beach, and Sherry Shonyo, of the Kempville section of the city, have been appointed local coordinators for an international student exchange program.

The American Institute for Foreign Study Scholarship Foundation, based in Greenwich, Conn., said Rapp and Shonyo will select host families in Virginia Beach for English-speaking high school students from Europe, Asia and Latin America for the school year opening in September.

The foreign students will arrive in the United States in late August and spend the next 10 months living with host families while attending a public high school in the city.

In June 1988, the students will return to their homelands.

Rapp and Shonyo said the 10-month program will provide benefits for the host families as well as for the students. The host families will be entitled to a tax deduction of as much as $50 a month for expenses incurred during the students' stay in the homes.

The foreign study institute, founded in 1964, said the visiting students will have their own spending money and be enrolled in a health insurance program.

Rapp will coordinate arrangements for foreign students attending First Colonial and Cox high schools while Shonyo will arrange accommodations for exchange students at Kempville High School.

Rapp and Shonyo are the only local coordinators representing the American Institute for Foreign Study in Virginia Beach.

If anyone is interested in hosting a foreign student or want more information, Rapp can be reached during the daytime at 463-5433 or Shonyo at 467-0554.

Behind the scenes

By James D. Barr

Staff Writer

When the 128 young tennis players and 68 officials take the courts at the National Girls' Clay Court Championships being held this week at the Virginia Beach Tennis and Country Club, they will all be depending on the exacting work of two men — Bernard "Woody" Woodis and Don Lameo, the club's maintenance supervisors.

In charge of preparing and taking care of the 22 clay courts in use during the tournament, Woodis, 40, and Lameo, 51, know that their work is vitally important.

"You've got to now make sure the lines are clean," said Woodis, senior maintenance supervisor.

"The lines are the most important thing," said Lameo, assistant to Woodis. "When the ball's hit, you've got to be able to see the line."

The work of the grounds crew, Lameo, is just as important as the tennis pros or anyone else the club. If the lines are off even a little, or the court is in bad shape, it affects everybody's game, he said.

Preparation of the clay courts starts early each spring when Woodis and Lameo put new surfaces on every one of the courts. They scrape off the old clay, and put three new layers back on. This requires spreading 100 bags of clay each weighing 80 lbs., on every court.

"It's a big job," said Lameo. There's not machine to do it, he said, it's "all done by hand."

Only after the clay has been spread and rolled down firm can the lines be put down.

Shark sightings didn't scare tourists, local officials say

By Lorie J. Gomez

Staff Writer

With timing which could have made beach-goers believe it was a Hollywood publicity stunt timed to prelude the opening of the new Jaws movie, the shark scare came ashore on the beaches of Sandbridge.

Tales of "chumming" and shark catches had area residents facing the very real threat of sharks moving closer to the shore where loved ones were frolicking in the surf.

Residents of Sandbridge lost no time in beginning their fight against the sharks and the men who lure them into the beach.

Triumphantly they saw Virginia Beach City Council pass legislation outlawing shark fishing from the shore beginning Memorial Day and not ending until Labor Day.

Now the water, and the tourist industry the beach is so dependent on, are safe from any harm the sharks might have done.

Residents of Sandbridge lost no time in beginning their fight against the sharks and the men who lure them into the beach.

Hester Waterfield, administrative assistant for the tourist development office of Virginia Beach Economic Development, said that the $497 million tourist industry doesn't seem to have suffered any noticeable damage from the shark scare.

"No one has really inquired," Waterfield said. She attributes that to the fact that the media outside of the Virginia Beach area has not taken hold of the shark story. Therefore there has been no problem with rumor control, either. "We've been lucky," she admitted.

Cathy Ruizgoubert of Kabler and Riggs, a real estate agency in Sandbridge, said that local people know about the situation more than vacationers. "We haven't had any uproar in our office," Ruizgoubert said. She said there had been no inquiries into the situation as far as she knew, adding that mostly she had "heard people on the beach talk about it."

Statistics jumped this spring

Police see no trend in local traffic fatalities

By James D. Barr

Staff Writer

In the first six months of last year, nine traffic fatalities were recorded on the highways and byways of Virginia Beach. This year, that number jumped to 21.

But numbers can be deceiving, said Lewis B. Thurston, public affairs officer for the Virginia Beach Police Department.

"They happen," he said. But the numbers can fluctuate for any given year, given time, given day, he said.

Thurston said he does not think this high rate should be given too much significance unless it should become a long term trend. This year, he said, while the numbers seem to be high, there is nothing to tie them together.

"A fatality accident," he said, "is nothing more than an accident gone sour." Though he is saddened by such tragedies, Thurston said an increase of some kind should be expected in a city like Virginia Beach where the population is growing so fast and you therefore have more cars on the road all the time.

There are "more people speeding and more people drinking and driving," said Thurston and the combination of speed, alcohol and not wearing seat belts is deadly.

By just looking at the statistics, said Thurston, the rate could be said to be going down, not up. The police department, he said,

There are "more people speeding and more people drinking and driving," ... and the combination of speed, alcohol and not wearing seat belts is deadly.

had a reported 15 fatalities in the months of January through April, only four in May and June, and only one has occurred in July.

Last year, he said, the nine accident fatalities in the first six months was followed by 30 in the second half of the year. With this year's figures, he said, it "could very well happen" that the numbers drop off after the high rate in the first six months.

Sgt. E. W. Lambert of the State Police said only one fatality was recorded on the interstate or the Virginia Beach-Norfolk Expressway in Virginia Beach. While the State Police recorded other fatal accidents in the area, he said, they were not in the Virginia Beach city limits.

According to a recent report, the 21 fatalities in Virginia Beach makes the city the highest traffic fatality rate in the five South Hampton Roads cities.

World traveler comes home to bring tourists to the Beach

By James D. Barr

Staff Writer

Washington, D.C., Hong Kong, Guam. Those are some of the places that Hugh C. Barton has traveled. And now, as the manager of the city's Convention Bureau, Barton is trying to attract other world travelers to come to Virginia Beach.

Vital to his work, he said, is "getting key decision makers to the Beach, show them what we have here, and let them see what we have to offer." — Hugh C. Barton, manager of the city's Convention Bureau.

Bureau generated $4.35 million for the city in 1978 while in 1986 the figure was just under $40 million.

"We feel strongly that the Pavilion has been a catalyst for the growth of not only the resort area, but the whole city," said Barton.

While the sun and the beach will always be able to draw thousands of tourists during the summer, he said, "you can't build a hotel for three months of business."

He said one of the main objectives of his staff, which included only himself and a secretary in the early days and now numbers nine, is to "develop Virginia Beach as a site for conventions, trade shows and meetings, especially in the off season."

One thing Barton knows is what vacationers are looking for at the beach. Born in Washington, D.C., Barton said, as a young boy, his family "vacationed in Virginia Beach since 1953."

His first job, he said, was at the old B & M Delicatessen which was located on 25th Street. "We made the greatest pastrami sandwiches ever," he said.

A political science major at Colgate University, Barton had thoughts of working with the foreign service but, he said, he became captivated by journalism while working as a copy boy for the now defunct Washington Evening Star.

In 1960, after a two-year stint in the Army, Barton returned to the States and worked for the Alexandria Journal. There, he said, "I did everything — city council, photographer, I even set the type!"

After getting married in 1961 to his wife, Karen, Barton jumped at an opportunity to write for one of the two English-language dailies in Hong Kong, the South China Morning Post. In his four years there he rose to the position of night city editor.

In 1966, Barton made a vocational change that put him on a path back to Virginia Beach. The government of Hong Kong formed the Hong Kong Tourist Association and, looking for someone who understood both the western media and what Hong Kong offered, tapped him for the position as press and publicity manager. "They made me an offer I couldn't refuse," he said.

But Barton said he found the job more than a financial boon. Because the whole venture was "starting from scratch," he said, he learned a lot about tourism and got "hooked on travel."

By 1972, with three growing boys, Barton and his wife decided the cramped and congested life-style of Hong Kong was not what they wanted. So after 10 years in the city they moved to Guam, an island "30 miles long and eight miles wide in the middle of the Pacific. Just a jewel of an island," he said.

There, with lots of space for the kids, Barton worked as general manager of a radio and television station.

Because of his past experience, the governor of the island put him on the Guam Visitors Bureau board. Through that, said Barton, he "got involved in the development of Guam as a honeymoon destination for Japanese travelers."

Driving fatalities

Take responsibility on the road

As Virginia Beach grows, everything about it also grows. One of the sad facts of such growth is the number of accident fatalities in the city is rising right along with it.

More drivers are on Virginia Beach roads than ever before. Paralleling this, the number of drivers who ill-advisedly drive after drinking is on the increase. Statistics show that almost one-half of all automobile fatalities are alcohol-related. Virginia Beach is no exception.

In the last few months, the Virginia Beach Police Department has stepped up its efforts to get impaired drivers off the roads. In May and June, over 550 people were charged with drunken driving, the highest number ever over a two-month period.

In the last few months, the Virginia Beach Police Department has stepped up its efforts to get impaired drivers off the roads. In May and June, over 550 people were charged with drunken driving, the highest number ever over a two-month period.

The scary part is not that the number of drunk drivers is increasing — it is the realization that they were probably always out there and it is only now that the law enforcement agencies are catching them.

The sad fact is that almost all of these fatalities are preventable. As an old saying goes, "Accidents don't just happen, they are caused."

Authorities say that the three major causes of traffic accidents are fatalities are drinking and driving, excessive speed and not wearing a seatbelt. While no one can account for the actions of "the other guy," if we would all take greater care in being responsible drivers, the roads might be a little safer. — J.D.B.

City services

Enhanced 911 emergency number

Since 1980, Virginia Beach residents have been able to use the "911" telephone number to reach an operator for an emergency response service. Now the system has been "enhanced" in the city, making it even more effective in helping those in need.

Every telephone call that comes in to the dispatchers on duty will include a computer link-up giving the dispatcher vital information about the origin of the call. So, not only will the dispatcher have verbal communications with the caller, but in the case something is forgotten or misinterpreted, the caller's number and location will also appear on the screen. To assist in bringing help to the person as quickly as possible, the jurisdiction of the emergency services is also shown.

So, not only will the dispatcher have verbal communications with the caller, but in the case something is forgotten or misinterpreted, the caller's number and location will also appear on the screen. To assist in bringing help to the person as quickly as possible, the jurisdiction of the emergency services is also shown.

This is helpful in two ways. Not only are those in need better served, but those who abuse the system with prank calls can be traced easier.

The cost of such a service is over $832,000. The cost of maintaining such a service will be covered by a 45 cent monthly surcharge on all telephone user's phone bill.

For those who have need of it, the benefits will far outweigh any dollar amount. — J.D.B.

Clerical assistance is needed in the Pembroke Six office suite. Knowledge of filing, light typing, and ability to answer the phone is required. Hours are 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday through Friday, but workers set own days and times, 10-20 hours per week.

A male volunteer is needed to do recreation activities evenings and weekends with male adult who has developmental disabilities. One or two hours per week and a six-month commitment is necessary.

Volunteers are still needed to assist mentally retarded adults on trips to Busch Gardens this summer. Two volunteers are needed for each trip and trips are planned every week. Mature volunteers who are willing to ride the rides are encouraged to apply.

Case Management Program needs volunteers as client advocate. Those with sincere interest in helping developmentally disabled persons are encouraged to apply. Volunteer will take client out of recreation, leisure activities. A valid driver's license and liability insurance required.

Dedicated teenagers and adults are encouraged to volunteer in the Respite Center Camp. The camp is held Aug. 10 through Sept. 4, 9 a.m. to 2 p.m., Monday through Friday. Volunteers are asked to work at least one week of the three week period, carrying out recreational activities in a camp setting with mentally retarded and developmentally disabled children ages 2-22.

Back Bay opportunities in July

Back Bay National Wildlife Refuge will offer public walking tours on July 26, 28 and 31. The walks will take place in the early morning or evening hours to avoid the summer heat and to increase the chances of viewing wildlife on the Refuge.

An early morning bird walk scheduled for Sunday, July 26, at 8 a.m., and a Refuge management hike to get underway at 8 a.m. on Saturday, July 31.

Beachcombing activities will be led by Refuge volunteer, Myrtle Lambert, who will assist the group in examining marine shells, eggcases, plants, and animals found along the barrier beach.

The morning beach walk involves a mile of walking and incorporates the Seaside and Dune Trails. Participants are introduced to the beach and dune habitats and learn about wildlife which utilize this harsh environment.

Bob Anderson, a local, well-known birder, will lead the early morning bird walk along refuge dikes to observe songbirds and marsh and water birds and the refuge management hike will include discussions of prescribed burning, shorebird protection, water management, and nesting sea turtle management.

All tours are free of charge, require no reservations, and begin from the Visitor Contact Station (V.C.S.), located on the Refuge at 4005 Sandpiper Road in Virginia Beach.

Participants should wear comfortable walking shoes and bring insect repellent. A canteen with water is also recommended. In addition to walks, film programs are offered each Saturday and Sunday at 10:30 a.m. and 2:30 p.m. in the V.C.S. Auditorium.

Additional information concerning these, and other programs, can be obtained by phoning 804-721-2412.

A prince of a guy

In these days of world politics and International diplomacy it is not too often you have the opportunity to rub shoulders with royalty.

Not that royalty are any different than the rest of us. As the saying goes, they still put their pants on one leg at a time. But as media celebrities, and as throw-backs to a time of enchanted children's stories, those who still have an official title somehow carry a little bit of majesty into the humdrum of everyday life.

It just so happens that a classmate of mine at college was a prince.

Not just any prince, though I doubt there are too many left who still hold the title, this was Albert Grimaldi, prince of Monaco, heir to the position his father, Prince Rainier, now holds.

When rumors of his coming started around campus, I thought, "Oh no, I hope he isn't one of those obnoxious media darlings." In fact, the first time I saw him on campus, two or three photographers were around him, clicking away.

Now and again, just like when I first saw him, there was reason for him to be hounded by the media. If his mother, the much-loved Princess Grace, was in town, you could count on some of the press being around.

Sometimes even his two sisters, Caroline and Stephanie, came along (though rarely his father) and that drew even more attention.

I was glad to find out, as I got to know him better, that Royal title or no title, Albert was a prince of a guy.

Of course, whether he liked it or not, he is a prince, with all the good and bad that goes along with the title. So, I found, his lifestyle a bit different than the average person.

My first real contact with him came during my sophomore year. We had a political science class together right after lunch so a bunch of us would eat together and then walk over to class.

I soon realized my first impressions of him were wrong. He was as "normal" a guy as anyone else and I found him to be very genuine and sincere.

Though a popular royal family, the Grimaldis were not a politically influential family. Therefore, there was little fear of the prince being abducted or bothered. He went to and fro fairly easily without restrictions.

I heard rumors again and again that he had a bodyguard who was always in the background, ready to deal with any sensitive issue or problem, but I never was able to substantiate that fact.

While his lifestyle on campus was not much different on a day-to-day basis than the rest of the student body, (he turned in papers late, crammed for tests and took part in campus shenanigans), when he went home for vacation or a holiday, it was a different story.

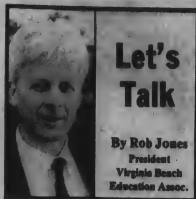

After returning to school from Christmas break, Albert and I were talking about how we spent our time at home. While I spent time with friends going to movies, shopping and visiting, Al casually spoke of spending time with his family in Paris, Monaco, skiing in the Alps and traveling around the rest of France. I told him I was thinking of doing that but I had the sniffles and didn't think I should travel too much.

Every once in a while I see his name in a magazine story, so-and-so predicting he is in love, in trouble, feuding with his father, or something scandalous. But the stories are usually making something out

Televised school board meetings create more public awareness

Let's Talk

By Rob Jones
President
Virginia Beach
Education Assoc.

Encouraged by many members of city council, the Virginia Beach School Board recently conducted its first meeting of the 1987-88 school year under the glare of the TV lights.

Based upon the number of citizens who usually attend school board meetings, the broadcast programs will probably never have a large audience. This is probably good. School board meetings are business meetings. Of the information presented to school board members, probably 75 percent of it is still on paper and never even seen by those who take the time to attend the meetings in person.

Watching a school board meeting on cable TV, you wouldn't even get to see the agenda given to people in attendance at the monthly meeting.

It is hard to be against televising the meetings of public bodies including the city council and the school board. The public certainly should have the right to know what is going on in government.

Televised council meetings have not seemed to diminish the ability of council to debate and discuss issues. However, a great deal of that is done before the meeting in the informal session which does not get televised.

In the same vein, there does not seem to be public criticism of politicians "show boating" on the airwaves.

VBEA rarely attends or follows the meetings of the city council except at budget time. Then it is indicative to monitor each meeting and work session (not televised) to keep up with the progress of the proposed budget.

At these times, it is just too important to rely on televised meetings.

Watching the proceedings on TV certainly does not let members of city council or the administration know that you are vitally concerned with their work. Being there in person does.

The ambience of a meeting also seems to be lost just as reading the minutes of a previous meeting does not tell all that went on at the meeting.

Being at nearly every school board meeting, I have the opportunity to read the accounts of the press which also covers the meetings. For the space that is given, the papers do a good job of summarizing what took place at the meetings.

They may miss something once in a while, but on the whole, the public is well served. The current education writer for the daily paper is doing exceptionally well.

Citizens will still have more opportunity to quickly read an article about what the school board is doing than finding the time to catch the broadcast or even sending their VCR to record the meeting and playing it back at a later date.

The bottom line is that televising meetings is certainly one more way the school board can give the public the opportunity to see them in action.

However, the school board realizes that their meetings do not reveal all that is being done in the school system and will continue to make efforts to keep the public informed in other ways such as "Insight" and programming on Channel 28.

The new superintendent, Dr. James Melvin, built an excellent reputation in his last school system for keeping the public informed and up-to-date.

While it cannot take the place of being there, televised school board meetings are another way of increasing the opportunity for public awareness.

Caution — lots of profits still to be taken

Wall Street

By
George T. Stagg

The near term in the market is dicey. Having achieved its new round number of 2,500 and having soared almost 300 points in less than two months, one would expect the bull to take a breather.

The bull is not a work-aholic and one never knows when he is ready to rest.

At this juncture, a word of caution is in order. In fact, the very near term could be difficult if the profit-takers decide to cash in some recent profits.

We still love the market, but we're keeping one eye on the exit signs.

The recent advance of the Dow has been marked by considerable skepticism and remarkable resiliency and has been fueled, in large part, by a flood of foreign money.

In fact, data through April suggests that the pace of foreign investment is running double that of last year when $18 billion in overseas money found its way into the U.S. stock market.

Perhaps it is no idle coincidence that much of the period of our market advance, the Japanese market has been weak. Japanese stocks have been floundering since the all-time peak of June 17 and we may be seeing restless money from that area finding its way into the U.S.

I have consistently warned that our greatest danger in this great bull market is euphoria which we have yet to experience. The market continues to advance in the face of negative world events and skepticism.

The hibernating bear waits in hiding for the overconfident hunter to make careless mistakes.

With the Dow now resting above the 2,500 milestone, everyone is smiling. The only thing we have to fear is lack of fear itself.

Enhanced 911 emergency response system now in effect in Virginia Beach area

Charles R. Wall, chief of police for the city of Virginia Beach, recently announced the implementation of the new "Enhanced 911" program.

Effective immediately, as 911 calls are received, the caller's telephone number, address, and name are displayed on a video monitor, within seconds, reducing the risk of incorrect or inadequate information being given by the caller.

The immediate reference also provides an instant trace of nuisance calls which commonly plague all police, fire, and rescue operations.

As more cities adopt the enhanced 911 system, more cases are being reported which prove the system to be justifiably labelled a "life saver."

Callers of all ages from all walks of life have been spared loss of home, property, and life by the institution of the new communications monitor system.

The service, now provided to all Virginia Beach residents through a complex computerized system, is funded by as monthly surcharge of 45 cents which appears on the subscriber's telephone statement.

INTRODUCING GENTLE CHIROPRACTIC!

Hi, I'm Michael Concessi, Doctor of Chiropractic. Perhaps gentleness in chiropractic is a new concept to you. It was to me before I began the seven years of college training necessary for my doctorate degree. During those years I learned the precise locations where light pressure can bring chiropractic relief to pain. In addition to my doctorate, I have a Bachelor's Degree in Science. Since college I have completed courses in Impairment Rating, Acupuncture, Nutrition & Applied Kinesiology. Even now I devote three days every month attending a nationwide seminar on chiropractic.

If you have hesitated visiting a chiropractor, perhaps you didn't know about this gentle or "soft touch" technique. It has been effective treating:

Back Pain Headaches Shoulder Pain Painful Joints
Numbness Burns Hip Pain Cold Hands/Feet

And, because most insurance companies recognize and cover chiropractic care, your treatment can be at little or no cost to you, according to the limits of your insurance policy. To encourage you to try gentle chiropractic, please accept this offer:

YOUR INITIAL SPINAL EXAMINATION (A $35.00 VALUE) IS ABSOLUTELY FREE!

This free examination will include an orthopedic test, a neurological test, a spinal alignment check, an examination for restricted or excess motion in the spine, a muscle strength test, and a private consultation to discuss the results. The Jump Page

But there is much more to keeping up the clay courts at the tennis club than the initial preparation and making sure the court dimensions are correct.

The clay must be watered twice everyday, then the courts must be "rolled" to keep them even and the surface must be "dragged" to pick up the top grains of clay and give it just the right surface, said Lameo.

Right now, said Lameo, for the championship tournament, "the courts are excellent." Lameo said a professional tennis coach who recently visited the club was highly impressed with the work of the crew.

"We try to get most of the work done by working in the morning," said Lameo, a Lynnhaven Shores resident. Everything has to be just right so when the club members come to play, they are satisfied, he said.

"The biggest challenge is making sure the courts are watered at night," said Woodis. While the sprinkler system comes on automatically, he said, if any of the over 60 sprinkler heads malfunction it causes havoc on the clay.

"If you get a bad sprinkler," said Lameo, it can create a divot in the clay or leave a soft spot on the court. At that point, he said, the crew has to hustle to fill in the hole and tap it down. If it is a wet spot, all they can do is wait for it to dry out, he said.

The two times the courts are watered are after 9:30 p.m. to around midnight each night and again around 11:30 a.m. to until 2:30 in the afternoon.

In the early morning and again in the afternoon following up on the watering with the rolling and dragging keeps the crew busy right up to when members start showing up for their scheduled court time, said Lameo.

That's normal routine, said Woodis, but "when tournament is coming up, we work hard before so we have everything up to tip-top shape."

Woodis said with each tournament, he learns how to prepare the courts better. Without going into too much detail he said with a laugh, "we learn from our mistakes."

While much of their time is focused on getting the courts ready, they have many other responsibilities. The club's crews cut the grass, trim hedges, paint scrape and haul whatever is needed around the club.

On top of keeping the courts up to snuff, the crew also keeps ice water handy for those playing. Very important in this hot weather, said Woodis.

Without ever hitting a ball, said Lameo, "you become a part of (club members) game everyday."

over Japan," he continued, "and it really went big."

Though they liked Guam, Barton said he and his wife decided in 1976 that it was time to go back to the States. In fact, the home they moved to and the one they live in now at the north end of Sandbridge, was previously owned by his grandmother and was one of the places his family used to vacation in when he was a boy.

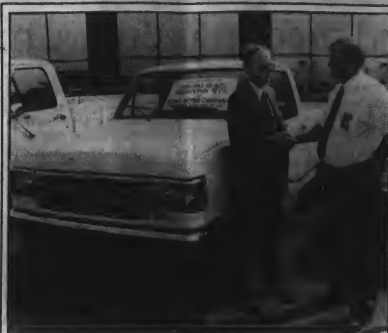

The only changes they made in it, he said, was to make it livable year-round.

In 1977, when the city decided to build the Pavilion, Barton was chosen to take the position of manager of the Convention Bureau and he has been at it ever since.

Never without something to do, Barton said he and his staff are hard at work already planning a "Holiday at the Beach" concept to attract people here in late November, the plans for next year's Shamrock Sports Festival are being worked on and the everyday efforts to draw conventions never stop.

Because the city never closes down, he said, neither does his work.

Take it away!

Hudson and Sawyer in the action

There was really only one way to feel very safe about your chances of winning last Saturday's 50-lap Late Model Stock Car feature race at Langley Speedway - get to the front and watch all the carnage in your rear view mirror.

That's just what Chip Hudson of Chesapeake, did as he captured the pole in qualifying and then stayed far enough in front of all the action to cruise to his second win of the year. Phil Warren, of Chesapeake, had pretty much the same idea and finished second, but the rest was a real scramble.

Roger Sawyer, of Chesapeake, managed to get third place despite a major wreck with Bubba Adams, of Chesapeake. Several other alterations marred the event in which Randy Hutchinson, of Seaford, finished fourth.

There was also an additional feature on Saturday night's card as local dirt cars invaded the Speedway for a special invitational race. Included in the field were four Late Model Stock Cars equipped with wings, and won, Mike Buffkin, a top driver at Dixieland Speedway in Elizabeth City, N.C., outlasted the field for the victory. Tommy Cherry won the Super Street Division run at the same time.

Mike Sprinkel, of Virginia Beach, held off a late challenge by Buddy Hyatt, of Newport News, to win his third Grand Stock feature of the season. Sprinkel took the lead on the 18th of the race's 30 laps, when he slipped past Buddy Dozier, of Virginia Beach, who finished third. Mitch Sarvis, of Norfolk, was fourth and Tony Steele, of Williamsburg, was fifth.

Tommy Hogard, of Hampton, has led the points race in the All-American Division since the end of May, but hadn't won a race since May 23 until Saturday. He took the lead on the second lap of the 20-lap All-American feature and never looked back. John Hicks, of Hampton, was second; Henry Kitch, of Portsmouth, fourth and Chuck Terry, of Hampton, fifth.

After the field of qualifiers was inverted in the 30-lap Mini-Stock race, points leader Buddy Malish, of Newport News, had to start last in a 17-car field. It took him six laps to get to the front and Malish then ran off with his seventh Mini-Stock victory of the year. A total of 68 immigrants, some from as far away as the Netherlands, Korea and Russia, took the oath of citizenship in time to celebrate Independence Day as Americans.

Taking the oath of citizenship

In celebration of the bicentennial of the United States Constitution, a Naturalization Court convened on the lawn of the historic Francis Land House on July 2. Taking the oath of citizenship were 68 immigrants from around the world, including four children.

Lillian Katz, president of the Lillian Vernon Corporation, spoke to the new Americans about her own naturalization and her pursuit of the "American Dream." Following the ceremony, a luncheon in her honor featured Professor Timothy O'Rourke, executive director of the Virginia Bicentennial of the Constitution Commission, who spoke on Thomas Jefferson and the Constitution.

Wildlife Refuge plans clean-up

Back Bay National Wildlife Refuge and False Cape State Park will be sponsoring a "Take Pride in America" beach clean-up day on Saturday, July 25, from 7:30 a.m. to 11 a.m.

The event is being held in an effort to increase public awareness, appreciation, and support for public lands.

Registration and orientation will get underway at 7:30 a.m. in the parking lot at Little Island City Park, located at the end of Sandpiper Road in Virginia Beach.

The Virginia Beach Division of Landscape Services is cooperating in the effort by providing trash and debris removal.

Scout members will be picking up litter in False Cape State Park and within the southern portions of the Refuge. The general public will work within the Refuge, beginning at the northern boundary and will proceed south to the Dune Trail.

All participants are encouraged to wear comfortable walking shoes, bring suntan lotion with sunscreen, and wear a hat.

Individuals interested in participating in the beach clean-up should contact the Refuge by Wednesday, July 23. Pre-registration is required and can be accomplished by phoning the Refuge at 721-2412 or, by registering in person, at the main headquarters located at 4005 Sandpiper Road in Virginia Beach.

The Refuge's office is open Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Summer day camp has openings for area youth

Spaces are still available for girls and boys ages 6 to 13 at the Virginia Beach Department of Parks and Recreation's one-week Summer Camp held in Virginia Beach City Parks.

Remaining camp programs for children ages 6 to 8 will be held at Red Wing Park and Bayville Farms Park. Children may attend either full day sessions from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., or afternoon sessions from 1 to 5 p.m. Extended hours are also available.

The cost is $15 per week for afternos only, $30 per week for full-day sessions.

Campers are offered a variety of outdoor activities that integrate values of sportsmanship, cooperation and teamwork with summertime fun.

Older children ages 9 to 13 will take part in four days of activities at the Munden Point Camp. The program culminates with an overnight camp out at the park.

Campers participate in outdoor activities including fishing, canoeing, archery, arts and crafts,

The $35 fee includes four days of activities, transportation to Munden Point Park, and a camp t-shirt. An additional $5 fee is required for overnight camp out supplies.

For more information or to register your child for a week of camping adventure, call 471-4884.

Education

Atlantic University to hold first graduation

The Harold J. Reilly School of Massotherapy, operated under the auspices of Atlantic University in Virginia Beach, will hold its first graduation exercises on July 25. Six students will receive diplomas of Practitioner in Therapeutic Massage.

Dr. James C. Windor, president of Atlantic University, and members of the Board of Trustees of the Association for Research and Enlightenment, Atlantic University, and the Edgar Cayce Foundation will participate in ceremonies to formally name and dedicate the educational institution, which opened to its first students in 1986.

The public is invited to attend the 7:30 p.m. ceremonies in the A.R.E. Visitor Center at 67th Street and Atlantic Avenue and to be guests at a reception following the exercises.

The school, established to train massage therapists and other health professionals in the arts and sciences of therapeutic massage and hydrotherapies, is certified by the Department of Education of the Commonwealth of Virginia.

The institution is named in honor of Harold J. Reilly, who studied under Dr. John Harvey Kellog, an early pioneer in preventive medicine and who established the Reilly Health Institute in Rockefeller Center in New York City in 1935.

Dr. Reilly is widely recognized as being one of the earliest practitioners of massage and hydrotherapy in the nation and became closely associated with the late psychic Edgar Cayce, who referred more than 1,000 patients to him.

Cayce is known throughout the world as a clairvoyant medical diagnostician. His "readings" describing physical disabilities and suggested treatments are regarded as major contributions to the practice of holistic medicine.

Dr. Reilly developed the Cayce/Reilly method of massage in order to make practical and generally applicable those techniques he developed and refined during 50 years of practice.

In keeping with the philosophies of both Dr. Reilly and Cayce, the school emphasizes the importance of a balanced, well-rounded life in which body, mind, and spirit function as a coordinated unit.

The school will offer its second summer session beginning on Aug. 24 and will begin its fall semester on Sept. 8.

Congressman Pickett to host a workshop on selling to the Navy

Second District Congressman Owen Pickett recently announced that he will sponsor a workshop next month to provide area businesses with information about contracting opportunities available with the federal government.

The workshop will begin at 1 p.m. on Aug. 14 in the Webb Center at Old Dominion University.

"Every day, the U.S. Navy awards millions of dollars worth of contracts — for everything from paper clips to sophisticated weapons," Pickett explained.

"Firms from all across the country, both large and small, compete for these contracts in what can be a difficult and very complicated process.

"This conference is designed to ensure that businesses from Tidewater will have the information and know the procedures to compete in this environment," he continued.

Sing it out!

Members of nine local church choirs practice for the recently held "World Relief Concert III." Over 300 singers and a 35-piece orchestra took part in two concerts at Chrysler Hall in Norfolk, raising over $9,700 for World Relief in India. Approximately 3,400 people attended.

Historic tree grove dedicated

As part of the celebration of the bicentennial of the United States Constitution, the American Forestry Association chose 100 municipalities nationwide to receive Historic Tree Groves.

Virginia Beach was chosen to receive one of the groves, which will consist of descendants of trees that witnessed events leading up to the signing of the United States Constitution.

The Historic Tree Grove was dedicated as part of the July 2 Naturalization Ceremony at the Francis Land House in Virginia Beach. Sixty-eight immigrants took the Oath of Citizenship to become Americans that day.

The first tree to be planted is a Sycamore grown from seeds collected from the Liberty Island Sycamores. The remaining trees will be shipped to Virginia Beach by next March.

In order to ensure their development, they will be nurtured in the city's greenhouse prior to being planted in the grove.

Dedicating a Historic Tree Grove in commemoration of the ceremony at which they became American citizens were, left to right, Jonalyn Roxanne Lundien, Matthew Wray Rhodes and Cindy Jane Lundien. The grove is located on the lawn of the historic Francis Land House in Virginia Beach.

The Francis Land House, chosen as the site for the grove as it was built in 1732, the year of George Washington's birth and the year ground was broken for Independence Hall in Philadelphia.

Oberndorf elected to chair regional council

Meyera Oberndorf, vice-mayor of the city of Virginia Beach, has been named chairman of the Policy Council of the Southeastern Virginia Job Training Administration.

The announcement was made by Executive Director Rick Scullo who said, "We're looking forward to association with her in this capacity. She's a woman of tremendous energy and sincere commitment."

Napolitano "impressed" after tour of national military bases

Virginia Beach resident Frederick J. Napolitano, chairman of the board of Pembroke Enterprises Inc., recently returned from a week-long national tour of five military installations and a meeting with the Joint Chiefs of Staff at the Pentagon in Washington, D.C.

Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger invited Napolitano to join the 60-person group, designated the Joint Civilian Orientation Conference 52.

JCOOC is the Secretary of Defense's premier civic leader program for increasing the understanding of the American public concerning national security issues and the readiness posture of the Armed Forces. The first JCOOC was held in 1948.

"I was particularly impressed with the quality and dedication of the young men and women in today's armed forces," said Napolitano, whose itinerary included visits, briefings, demonstrations and displays on the USS Forrestal (CV59), the USS Canopus (AS34), at the U.S. Army Infantry Center at Fort Benning, Georgia, the Military Airlift Commands at Little Rock and Scott Air Force Base, the Marine Corps Air Station, Cherry Point and Camp Lejeune, N.C., Andrews AFB, Maryland and the Pentagon in Washington.

"Long days which began at 5 a.m. and ended after 11 p.m. were the rule," said Napolitano, whose activities included jumping from a parachute tower, using a periscope on a submarine and driving a tank.

Hunt awarded $10,000 ALF postdoctoral fellowship

Christine M. Hunt, M.D., of Virginia Beach, has been awarded the American Liver Foundation's Millie Caskie Memorial Postdoctoral Research Fellowship.

Working under the supervision of Dr. Phillip S. Guzelian at the Medical College of Virginia, Dr. Hunt's research project deals with the origin of alcohol-associated cancers.

"Research into the causes and cures of liver diseases is the best hope of the 25 million Americans suffering from these ailments," said Thelma King Thiel, president and chief operating officer of the American Liver Foundation.

This year the Foundation awarded 10 postdoctoral fellowships of $10,000 each and 13 student grants of $1,500 each. Since the program's inception in 1980, a total of 178 fellowships have been awarded, with a total value of $1,033,016.

The American Liver Foundation also sponsors public education programs and support groups for patients and their families.

A summary of the rate adjustments and other related information is provided below:

Water rate
• The current water rate of $1.62 per thousand gallons was increased $0.19 per thousand gallons.

• The impact of this change on the average residential customer is approximately $1 per month.

• The impact of this change on one-half of all bills rendered for single-family residential service will be $0.85 or less per month.

• The water rate will increase an additional $0.19 per thousand gallons on July 1, 1988, which will bring the water rate at that time to $2 per thousand gallons.

• The impact of this second $0.19 adjustment on the average residential customer will be approximately $1 per month.

• The water "rate" was last adjusted in 1983 — four years ago.

• The "minimum service availability charge" was reduced for all customers. For example, the current minimum service charge for residential service of $3.45 per month was reduced to $3.35 per month.

Sanitary sewer charge
• The monthly charge for "sanitary sewer" service was not increased.

• Other fees and charges
• Certain miscellaneous utility charges were increased to reflect the cost of providing the service. Miscellaneous fees adjusted included: account initiation, fire hydrant charges, meter testing, restoring service, sanitary sewer connection fees and sanitary sewer pump station capacity fees.

All changes in water rates and miscellaneous utility charges are effective Aug. 1.

Water and sanitary sewer service provided by the city is supported from "user" fees, i.e., the charges for water and sewer service; city tax revenues do not support the utility fund.

Changes in the water rate are necessary to provide funds to finance the design and construction of the Lake Gaston Water Supply Project. The Lake Gaston Water Supply Project is an 85 mile, 60-inch diameter, raw water pump station and transmission pipeline to bring water from the Roanoke River Basin to Virginia Beach.

Additional information on the rate adjustments can be obtained from the Department of Public Utilities at 427-4631.

Diehl case: Reactions differ on its effect on adoption policies

By Lorie J. Gomez
Staff Writer

Members of two city departments which deal daily with special cases involving children, reacted in very different ways to questions about the recent Diehl murder case.

The highly publicized case brought to trial Michael and Karen Diehl, both of whom faced charges of first degree murder, abduction, child neglect and assault in the October 1986 killing of their adopted son, Dominick J. "Andrew" Diehl.

Michael Diehl was convicted on all four charges, while jurors in the case of Karen Diehl rejected a first-degree murder conviction, convicting her of manslaughter, abduction, child neglect, and assault.

Curtis Jones, sergeant in charge of crimes against juveniles within the Virginia Beach Police Department, said the Diehl case was terrible, though it may raise the public consciousness concerning child abuse. Frances Elrod, director of the Virginia Beach Department of Social Services, refused to comment on the Diehl case or the implications on her department's adoption procedures and policies.

Elrod did say that it would "surprise" her if new rules were passed to govern adoption because of the Diehl case.

"It will take its place among the other cases," Elrod said, when the state reviews its codes concerning adoption. Elrod said that the reviews are done on all state programs periodically.

"Specific cases do not affect policies," Elrod said, stressing that all cases are weighed equally on the state level. People concerned about adoption procedures can make their concerns known to officials in a variety of ways, according to Elrod.

One way is to notify city agencies such as the Virginia Beach Department of Social Services. Elrod would not, however, comment when asked if her department had received many phone calls from concerned area residents since the Diehl case. Elrod said only that the adoption program within social services is "very successful."

Jones, who works as part of the police department's trauma team, made up of a detective and a social worker, said they look into to about 500 cases each year, usually referred to them by the department of social services. "Very few" of the cases involved adopted children, Jones said.

Concerning the Diehl case, Jones said, "I don't know if I'd call it the worst" case of child abuse in Virginia Beach. He believes that the media coverage played a large part in the case's notoriety. Part of the reason, Jones speculated, was because it was the first time parents had ever been convicted of abduction. Jones said that the Diehl case may increase local awareness of child abuse, but he credits school programs with the most success in increasing awareness. "People are just becoming more aware," Jones said.

When asked if the Diehl case indicated that there needed to be more stringent laws or adoption procedures, Jones said, "It's not the fault of our police or social services. It just happened here."

City's fire department seaworthy Unique in Virginia

By John M. Farrell
City of Virginia Beach
Public Information Officer

Wherever there's a fire or someone to be rescued, whether it's three miles out at sea or several miles inland, the Virginia Beach Fire Department is there . . .

On wheels . . . and with propellers, ready for action.

The department's two amphibious boats, called LARCS, or lighter amphibious rescue craft, makes that possible.

So far, the LARCS, bought from the Army in 1977, have performed several at-sea rescues. However, most of the firefighters' heroics have been on land where they have battled hurricanes and severe storms to rescue residents.

"We have to know the rules of the sea, just as a motorist should know the rules of the road." — Bill Davis, LARC crewman.

Such was the case this past New Year's Day when a LARC pulled into Sandbridge to help evacuate residents who were threatened with being flooded out by heavy rains. But that episode ended quietly and without injury.

Presently, Virginia Beach is the only city in the state with its own amphibious rescue firefighting unit. The other amphibious vessels in the area are

$1.5 million short VBHMA gives Arts Center $15,000 for new building

By James D. Barr
Staff Writer

At a recent meeting of the Virginia Beach Hotel and Motel Association (VBHMA), Jimmy Capps, president of the VBHMA, presented a $15,000 check to Michael Marks, executive director of the Virginia Beach Arts Center.

The money, which will go toward the Capital Campaign for the Arts Center's new building at the end of 23rd Street, was pledged by the Association in October 1983 with the understanding that the donation would be made once ground was broken for the new building.

The building is now under construction, said Marks, and is 10 to 15 percent complete. Having already raised $6 million for the structure, he said, the Arts Center has "about $1.5 million to go." Because it is a "specialty building," said Marks, construction is a bit more complex and therefore takes more time to complete. The completion date, at this point, he said, is the end of 1988.

"It's going to be a tremendous asset for our area," said Capps. "It's one of those things that everyone is pulling for."

"We are very pleased with the support of the Virginia Beach Hotel and Motel Association to our Capital Campaign and its support throughout the year," said Marks. "They have been very supportive of us over the last four or five years," he said, noting the associations donation of $2,500 for the prize money for the first-place win

From Scotland to U.S.: A new American citizen reflects on the change of lifestyle

By Julia Wilson

Virginia Beach Public Information
For city employee Moira Wright, this July 4 meant more than fireworks and fun; it marked her first Independence Day as a U.S. citizen.

Her intercontinental trek from Stirling, Scotland, began in the 1970s, when she met and married a U.S. Navy man stationed there.

When he was transferred back to "the States" in 1981, she came, too.

"He calls me his 'walking, talking souvenir,'" she said of her husband, who is aboard the U.S.S. Merrimack, an oiler now cruising the Mediterranean Sea. While he's gone, her parents are visiting from Scotland, and she's enjoying showing them around.

Although she's an old hand at it now, being in America wasn't always fun.

"It was difficult at first; I did get homesick for my family back in Stirling," she said. "But, I've been extremely fortunate in having good friends and neighbors here."

Beach tourist information coordinator came for a vacation and never left

By James D. Barr
Staff Writer

She came for a vacation on the 4th of July in 1959 and never left. That's what happened to Linda Walker, who, for the past seven years, has been the supervisor at the city's

Walker

Visitors Information Center located at 19th Street and Pacific Avenue, next to the Dome.

Born and raised in West Virginia, she attended Fairmont State College with thoughts of becoming a teacher. But in 1959, when visiting some friends in Norfolk for a vacation, Walker found a job at the old Mitchell & Smith Cork Plant on Hampton Boulevard and never returned to college.

During her visit, she said, she and a friend went to an employment agency on a whim and the lady said she had the perfect job for her.

So, despite the heat of the Tidewater summer, she stayed in Norfolk as a secretary and processing clerk.

"When I came, it was absolutely the hottest place I'd ever been," she said. Coming from the hills of West Virginia, she said, the humidity and heat were almost unbearable.

What made it even worse, she said, was she and her two roommates lived in third floor apartment at 34th and Granby that had no air conditioning. "It was the hottest place around," she said.

"You talk to hundreds of people every day. It's always interesting and you learn so much." — Linda Walker, Virginia Beach Visitors Information Center supervisor, on the benefit of the job.

When one of the roommates became engaged it was necessary to find a new apartment. Not only did they find an apartment but a landlady who was a matchmaker.

"She had two nephews," said Walker, and it wasn't long before the landlady got the boys and girls together.

Of the two brothers, Linda was matched with Richard "Dick" Walker.

"We had our first date on Labor Day, 1959," she said.

The matchmaker made a good match, she said, and the two were engaged that October and married the following January. Her roommate Marjorie, soon married the other nephew, Mike Walker, so the once high school friends and roommates became sisters-in-law.

Walker continued working at the cork plant until October 1961 when their first child, David, was born. In the spring of 1964 their second child, Melanie, followed, and Walker remained a homemaker as the two children grew up.

Finally, in 1970, with the children in school, Walker started looking for a part-time job.

It was a call from the local Chamber of Commerce for Walker's sister, who had applied for a position, that landed her a job. Her sister had already found a job and when Walker spoke to the Chamber person, she thought the opportunity sounded good and accepted the position.

When the Chamber of Commerce moved to Pembroke in 1974 they also opened an office on 20th and Pacific for tourists. Linda transferred there as an information clerk under Mildred Fridley.

"We outgrew that building very, very fast," said Walker, now a resident of the city's Shadowlawn section. So they moved the operation to the south side of the Dome, she said, where they are now located.

"When I came, it was absolutely the hottest place I'd been." — Linda Walker, who never left after her first visit to the area.

There Walker worked under Levon Dunn, and when he left the position a few years later she was the senior person to fill his shoes. She's been there ever since.

Every day is different and there is always something to do, she said. "I love it. If I didn't, I couldn't work here."

Her responsibilities are varied, she said, from coordinating office work schedules, to answering phones, to the on-the-spot training of the assistants. "I do everything my girls do," she said.

And the figures for the month of June show she and her office is hopping.

Aside from trying to keep the almost 200 brochure racks full, the Visitors Information Center answered 14,512 calls last month, almost 500 each day. They also mailed out over 5,000 pieces of mail, which doesn't include the thousands of pieces of mail that goes out through a service they use, and answered the questions of 19,675 people who walked in off the street.

But, she said, the Visitors In-Population growth

Don't let numbers fool you

The recent figures released by the Tayloe Murphy Institute on the population changes for the seven Hampton Roads cities reported that Virginia Beach grew faster than any other city over the last year.

City officials say it's important to know these figures because some state funding is based on a per-capita amount. Lower figures means lower funding.

The figures given in this latest report are some 25,000 to 30,000 less than what figures city officials use. The Tayloe Murphy Institute reported a total of 333,400 people in 1986, up 4.3 percent from the 319,400 in 1985. City officials say that the population in 1985 was 343,200 and rose 5.8 percent to 363,000.

But of greater importance than sheer numbers is the way of life the city offers those who live here. There are a number of cities around the nation with about the same population as Virginia Beach. The difference between them is whether they are a vibrant and developing or on the wane, barely maintaining their infrastructure.

But of greater importance than sheer numbers is the way of life the city offers those who live here. There are a number of cities around the nation with about the same population as Virginia Beach. The difference between them is whether they are a vibrant and developing or on the wane, barely maintaining their infrastructure.

Virginia Beach, with all its growth and prosperity, must be ever careful not to let the growth figures overshadow any social problems that can also grow.

Because the city depends so highly on the tourist trade, which sometimes seeks to add a little glitter and glamour to things, those in decision-making positions must take extra precautions to deal with the deeper issues. As the city grows in size it must also develop in character.

It may seem that just keeping up with the many problems created by increasing population is enough. But in the long run, every precaution must be taken to look below the surface to see what can be done now to avert future problems before they get out of hand. Remember not to just look at the numbers. — J.D.B.

Ecology

Tree committee has big job

The city is growing rapidly. Neighborhoods are springing up. Roads are being built. In the midst of this booming enterprise, questions must be raised about the long term ecological consequences of such activity.

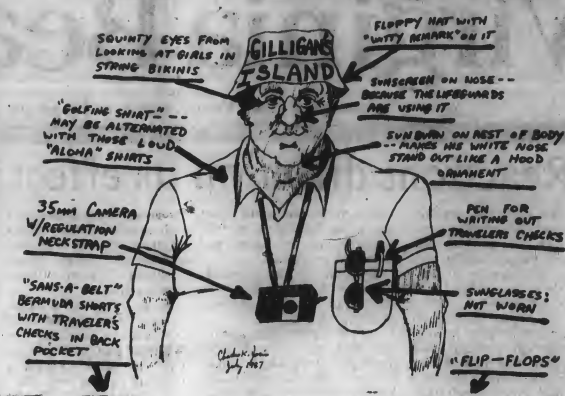

Rather than wait for new or stronger regulations to make it through the bureaucracy of city and state government, it is good to see an independent committee, composed of various professionals interested in tree preservation, being formed to address the situation from within the ranks and create guidelines in this area.

Made up of city and business leaders, the committee will hopefully deal with the city's ecological needs and present voluntary guidelines agreeable to everyone involved. The challenge before the committee is to establish a set of guidelines addressing the problems and at the same time be presented with the seriousness to gain respect.

Because the guidelines are not enforceable by law, the question is raised as to whether those associated with the building trade will follow the committee's recommendations. It is hoped that the delicate balance of ecological forces in this area is apparent to all and therefore those who are in the industry will comply with whatever the committee recommends. — J.D.B.

Temporary closure of Refuge Dike announced

Refuge Manager Anthony D. Leger recently announced that management activities at Back Bay National Wildlife Refuge will result in a temporary closure of portions of the Refuge Dike system until August 31.

Leger stated that approximately 2 1/4 miles of the eight miles of dikes would be closed to the public to insure visitor safety while needed habitat improvement operations take place on the Refuge.

Dredging is taking place on the Bay side of the west dike to facilitate water management efforts which will improve the marsh habitat for waterfowl.

The closed area extends from the northernmost gate on the west dike to the A/B Crossdike and includes the B/C Crossdike. All public access is prohibited in this area while dredging operations are on-going.

Hikers and bikers who normally use the West Dike will be directed to the East Dike as an alternate route. The A/B Crossdike will be open for public use and signs will direct visitors away

Maps and additional information will be available at the Visitor Contact Station (V.C.S.) and from leaflet dispensers located near the V.C.S. and parking area.

All inquiries should be directed to the Refuge Manager, 4005 Sandpiper Road, P.O. Box 6286, Virginia Beach, Virginia 23456. Information can also be obtained by phoning (804) 721-2412, Monday through Friday, from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Rec centers have coupons available for residents

In support of the Summer Neighborhood Activity Center programs sponsored by the Virginia Beach Department of Parks and Recreation, bowling and skating centers in Virginia Beach are offering special discount coupons for reduced rates at their facilities.

For each coupon redeemed, the Activity Centers will receive a donation to be used for program "extras." Thirty-one neighborhood centers providing recreational activities for elementary school children are in operation this summer.

Coupons are available at the Virginia Beach recreation centers at Kempsville and Bow Creek or at the main office of the Department of Parks and Recreation. For more information, call 471-4884.

Don't make me laugh

Most of the time I don't mind being in the limelight. Where some people cower when attention is brought to them, I love recognition.

But there was one time, back about four years ago, when I wished I could have disappeared. The attention I drew to myself was not under the best of circumstances.

During my senior year at college, my roommate's family visited during some special weekend, and I was invited along to attend a performance by the college choir.

For the next hour and a half, all of us enjoyed a wonderful concert which featured a mixture of all types of music. Nothing unusual happened and everything was under control.

There is one thing I do have to mention. For most of the weekend, I had teased my roommate's younger sister and generally had a good time with her. Some of that teasing had carried over into the concert so throughout the performance there was an air of levity.

Upon returning to our seats after the intermission, she and I noticed something strange about the man sitting beside us.

Whenever the concert hall was quiet, we could hear his nose "whistling" every time he breathed. While it may not seem too funny now, there was something about it then that had us giggling under our breath.

Moments before the song ended, in the middle of a long and almost inaudible amen, I snorted. There is no other way to describe it. It was a snort of the snortiest type.

At first we giggled about his "whistle." But soon, we were laughing about each other and we couldn't stop.

In-between songs we would have an outlet, and we would release a howl or two. But when the last few songs were being sung, it was all we could do to sit still.

I had tears in my eyes from laughing. To try to stop I looked away from my roommate's sister. I tried to think of serious matters. All to no avail.

My last ditch effort was to bite myself. Surely, I thought, inflicted pain would halt my case of the snickers.

But it was too late. I couldn't stop giggling and the two of us were literally shaking the row of chairs we sat in.

Finally, the last song of the evening was introduced and I figured I could last through it. I almost did.

At the end of the song, there was a series of slower and quieter repeats of "Amen." Not just amen, but a-a-a-a-men. Pause. A-a-a-a-a-a-men. Pause. A-a-a-a-a-a-men.

My teeth were practically breaking through the skin of my knuckles but the laughter had become contagious and I couldn't hold it.

Moments before the song ended, in the middle of a long and almost inaudible amen, I snorted. There is no other way to describe it. It was a snort of the snortiest type.

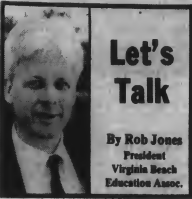

That snort, that one little slip, resounded throughout the concert hall and everyone turned to see what happened.

Hoping to avert attention, I quickly turned and stared at my roommate's sister. I hoped everyone would think it was her.

It's the only time I can really say I had the last laugh.

Twelve Beach teachers attend NEA's annual meeting in L.A.

Let's Talk

By Rob Jones
President
Virginia Beach
Education Assoc.

The 8,000 voting delegates attending the National Education Association's (NEA) annual representative assembly in Los Angeles included twelve classroom teachers from the Virginia Beach Education Association.

The VBEEA representatives were Gary Blumenstein, Laurelee Grim, Lisa Guthrie, Shirley Harley, Jane Harvey, Carol Jones, Robley Jones, Shirley Pearson, Claire Polley, Mary Sue Richardson-Piccino, Cheryl Tokak, Cathy Wadley and Joyce Whitmore.

Although the convention schedule was grueling, Beach delegates mixed July Fourth at the Hollywood Bowl and a delightful dinner at Lawry's California Center with the business of the convention.

The convention's business, though not generally as conroversial as media coverage of the convention would lead one to believe, was highlighted by the reelection of Virginia's Mary Hatwood Futrell to serve an additional two-year term as NEA president and a commitment that NEA set aside $1 per member per year for five years to build a massive permanent endowment for the NEA-created National Foundation for the Improvement of Education (NFIE).

Futrell's proposal to increase the NFIE endowment is a follow-up to her 1985 effort to provide a one dollar per member which set aside $1.7 million. "It's time," said Futrell, "for the NEA members to sit at the foundation roundtable, not as petitioners, but as equals, not as grant-seekers, but as grant-givers, not as spectators, but as creators."

The $1.7 million committed in 1985 led to the creation of "Operation Rescue," a nationally heralded dropout prevention program. The $13 million endowment authorized by New Business Item 6 will allow NFIE to award over $1 million per year in grants to fund local projects that do everything from help to improve student writing skills to harness new technologies for classroom instruction.

Clearly, NEA is putting its money where its mouth is — toward improving education.

New Business Item 52 calls on the NEA to petition the advertising, television, and film industries to produce programs for young children which eliminate profanity and violence and which stress concern, gentleness, cooperation, and respect for one another.

Teachers, many of whom are parents, share the concern that current programming standards may be harming our children.

The two convention issues which captured the headlines of our nation's newspapers were the opposition to the appointment of Robert H. Bork to the U.S. Supreme Court and the resolution on "English as the Official Language."

The Bork debate centered on his record on both women's and civil rights. After a review of the Bork record, the overwhelming majority of the NEA delegates supported opposition to his appointment.

It is interesting to note that Justice Powell, a distinguished Virginian and excellent member of the Supreme Court, was appointed after two previous nominees, Carswell and Haynsworth, were rejected by the Senate. The Senatorial confirmation of the president's appointment is an important element of the check-and-balance included to protect the interest of the people and is specified by our Constitution.

The NEA and all citizens should express their concerns regarding Supreme Court appointments to the Senate.

The issue of English as the official language is a complex one. The Resolutions adopted by the NEA include the statement, "The Association urges that the programs for limited English proficiency students emphasize English proficiency as a primary goal to enable these students to function in an English-speaking society."

This, of course, was not in the headlines, rather, the headlines cited the NEA challenge to English as the official language. The opposition to English as the official language was based on the fact that it is in conflict with many successful bilingual education programs now in existence.

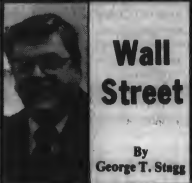

If bilingual education is successful with certain foreign born students, should not that instructional option be available to the teacher? The vote on this issue was very close. Most Beach delegates did not vote on the prevailing side on this issue.

The NEA bases its program and its actions on the decisions of the 8,000 delegates to the annual Representative Assembly. NEA's membership increased by 60,000 last year, a testimony that this democratic, participatory governance structure is working.

I offer special thanks to the twelve teachers that provided quality representation of VBEEA.

Will Dow rise another 1,000 points? We will see

Wall Street

By
George T. Stagg

According to our technical analyst, Joe Feshback, we could easily see Dow 3500 over the next 12 to 18 months. As unbelievable as that sounds, Joe makes a good case:

*Equity funds flush with cash in excess of levels they had at the beginning of the year. Presently, these funds have nearly 10 percent or $21 billion in cash looking for a home in the stock market.

*The leveraging of corporate America continues as companies buy back their own stock and the merger and acquisition game is alive and well. As this continues, huge cash reserves are injected into the system for reinvestment. This restructuring is one reason that the market has not gone through a correction of more than 10 percent in over three years.

*The dollar has bottomed against foreign currencies and according to a well-known Japanese currency expert, Mr. Ogai, the yen may go as high as 180 to the dollar in the next 18 months. This will have tremendous impact on improving U.S. trade deficits.

*Shift from fixed income funds to equity funds as equities are yielding much better returns than bonds for the first time in five years.

Until now, investors had no incentive to switch from bonds to stocks as total return was equal or better in fixed income portfolios. That is no longer the case.

*The Japanese onslaught on the U.S. stock market may be another day that will live in infamy. As soon as the Japanese fears about the dollar dissipate, they will become a major force on the demand side of our market and the potential is explosive.

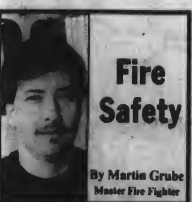

The Japanese currently have eight to nine times the exposure to U.S. bonds than U.S. stocks and when they shift gears, they could blow the top off this market.

Right now, they have a mere 1.5 percent of their portfolios in our equities, on average. They would like to have 10 percent, or put another way, seven times more exposure to the U.S. market.

If even half, or just a third, of this money ($30 to $50 billion) comes into U.S. stocks, Dow 3500 will be a cakewalk.

And, if you think they ain't got it, consider this. We're told that membership in Tokyo's finest golf club costs a mere $3.5 million. I wonder if the members ever look for lost balls.

Simple precautions against car fires

Fire Safety

By Martin Grube
Master Fire Fighter

We depend greatly on our automobiles for getting us to our jobs, for shopping and for our much needed vacations. Sometimes these machines don't function properly and they catch on fire.

During 1986 alone, your Virginia Beach professional firefighters responded to 572 automobile fires throughout the city.

Hopefully you will remember some of these tips on how to react if your automobile does catch on fire.

If you own an automobile with electric locks, you should try to unlock the door from the inside without using the electric button.

To do this, close the door, lock it and place your finger on the lock mechanism and slide it in the opposite direction to unlock it.

If you practice this now, you may not panic if the car cuts off and the electric lock will not function.

Most car fires are a result of

Arts and Entertainment

Arts Center to sponsor three shows in Aug. and Prisms III

Three Virginia Beach artists will display their work from Aug. 3 through 31 at the satellite spaces for art sponsored by the Virginia Beach Arts Center.

Photographer Kevin M. Gorman will display large-format color prints at the Humana Gallery, artist Anne P. Myers will show encaustic paintings at Westminster-Canterbury Gallery and Emma Meehan will display a collection of still life in oils and acrylic at the Municipal Gallery.

Gorman is a senior photographer for the Veteran's Administration in Hampton and holds a B.A. in visual communications and an A.S. in industrial photography.

He has won numerous awards and honors for his work in biomedical and architectural photography, which has been extensively published.

Gorman is concerned with technical excellence in his personal work and chooses landscape and seascape as subjects for the work on view.

Anne P. Myers, a Tidewater resident since 1943, has been painting extensively and exhibiting in the southeast for many years, as well as in local shows and galleries.

Westminster-Canterbury Gallery is open to residents and guests of the building. The Humana Gallery, free and open to the public, is located in the dining room of Bayside Hospital at 800 Independence Blvd. Hours are Monday through Saturday, 7 a.m. to 6 p.m.

Meehan, a longtime volunteer and supporter of the Virginia Beach Arts Center, moved to Virginia Beach in 1969. She was born and educated in Philadelphia, Pa., where she attended Villanova University. Meehan has been painting for nearly 20 years and exhibits widely throughout Tidewater. Her works are in the collection of the Grumman Aerospace Corp., N.Y.; the Bank of Virginia Beach, United Virginia Bank, Virginia Beach; and the Virginia Beach Public Library.

She has participated in many juried shows, including the Greater New York Outdoor Art Show, Norfolk Academy Scholarship Fund Exhibit, Occasion for the Arts, Williamsburg; Junior Women's Art Show, Williamsburg; and the Virginia Beach Boardwalk Art Show.

The Municipal Gallery is located in the second floor corridor of the Virginia Beach City Administration Building at North Landing Road and Courthouse Drive.

Special Exhibition
"Prisms III" — an exhibition of children's paintings, drawings, prints, ceramics and multi-media crafts — will be on display in the Virginia Beach Arts Center's galleries Aug. 19 through Sept. 8. An opening reception — free and open to the public — will be held Thursday, Aug. 20, from 5:30 to 7:30 p.m.

This is the third year the Arts Center has mounted the prolific Prisms exhibit, which is organized to celebrate the efforts of young artists ages five through 12. "Prisms III" artwork is by children who participated in the summer Art Camp program at the Center.

The Art Camp program, in its sixth year, allows children to experiment with a myriad of artistic themes and methods of artmaking.

Included in the exhibit are many paintings and drawings — works in colored pencils, tempera, acrylic and mixed media. Students enrolled in the "Painting from the Masters" class were shown paintings by Cezanne, Van Gogh, Ryder and Redon and then taught how to create a likeness of the masterpieces using their own artistic expressions. Several of these works are included.

Gallery hours are Monday through Saturday, 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.; and Sunday, 1 to 4 p.m.

The Virginia Beach Arts Center is located at 1711 Arctic Avenue, three blocks from the oceanfront. Call 425-0000 for further information about any of these shows.

INTRODUCING GENTLE CHIROPRACTIC!

Hi, I'm Michael Concessi, Doctor of Chiropractic. Perhaps gentleness in chiropractic is a new concept to you. It was to me before I began the seven years of college training necessary for my doctorate degree. During those years I learned the precise locations where light pressure can bring chiropractic relief to pain.

In addition to my doctorate, I have a Bachelor's Degree in Science. Since college I have completed courses in Impairment Rating, Acupuncture, Nutrition & Applied Kinesiology. Even now I devote three days every month attending a nationwide seminar on chiropractic.

If you have hesitated visiting a chiropractor, perhaps you didn't know about this gentle or "soft touch" technique. It has been effective treating:

Back Pain Headaches Shoulder Pain Painful Joints
Neck Pain Arthritis Arm/Leg Pain Stiffness
Numbness Bursitis Hip Pain Cold Hands/Feet

And, because most insurance companies recognize and cover chiropractic care, your treatment can be at little or no cost to you, according to the limits of your insurance policy. To encourage you to try gentle chiropractic, please accept this offer:

YOUR INITIAL SPINAL EXAMINATION (A $35.00 VALUE) IS ABSOLUTELY FREE!

This free examination will include an orthopedic test, a neurological test, a spinal alignment check, an examination for restricted or excess motion in the spine, a muscle strength test, and a private consultation to discuss the results. If x-rays or further tests are required to reach a diagnosis you will be advised of their costs before proceeding.

operated by the Navy.

Each of the city's two LARCS staffs a crew of five, and every crew member is required to know basic navigation and marine operation.

Bill Davis, fire inspector, enjoys his role as LARC crewman because it breaks up his daily routine of his primary job. "We have to know the rules of the sea, just as a motorist should know the rules of the road," Davis said. "For instance, there aren't any signs out there in the ocean, so you have to know what certain lights mean flashed from another boat, or what warning horns are."

In an at-sea emergency, the Coast Guard and the city's LARC Unit both answer the call. Generally, the LARC Unit reaches the scene first.

But not because it's faster. "We are already on the oceanfront, so it's logical we respond sooner," Davis said. "On the other hand, the Coast Guard originates from the Little Creek Amphibious Base. So although we cannot exceed 8.5 knots, we reach the scene in half the time the Coast Guard takes because of our location."

But emergencies are few, according to the firefighter. In the past six months, the unit has received only three calls. Davis, however, is not too concerned about that statistic.

"Even if we receive only one call and rescue one person per year, the unit is still doing its job, and the LARCS are still providing an invaluable service to the community," he said.

To maintain and sharpen their professional skills at sea, crew members perform simulated exercises during the warmer months.

"During those exercises, we actually have someone in the water, and we try to rescue that person as if it were the real thing. Also, we burn a couple of boats and then go for it!"

"Nothing is done in jest," Davis adds. "Everything is serious. Besides, being a member of this unit gives me a sense of satisfaction whenever I'm able to help someone."

Wright takes American citizenship seriously

sations in American life as well. "The heat is nice, I enjoy it very much," she said. "In Scotland, I've seen days in the summer when the heater had to be on. There are no air conditioners there, they're just not needed. And we do have good beaches in Britain, but not the climate for enjoying them!"

Along with the increase in temperatures here, Wright said she's found a faster paced way of life as well, but it seems to suit her. As secretary to Police Chief Charles Wall, she enjoys her work, even when she runs into unfamiliar "Americanisms."

"In Scotland, we call the sidewalk the 'pavement,' and to 'queue' means to line up," she explained. "Sometimes I tend to come up with expressions people don't understand, especially in business correspondence. On the whole, though, things aren't that different."

After six years of living in America, Wright began to consider becoming a citizen. "It was a big decision," she said, "but I wanted to be able to exercise my right to vote. I'm living here and subject to all the laws, so I wanted to put my two cents in."

"There are so many places on this earth where people aren't allowed to vote," she continued, "but we have that privilege here."

Her naturalization ceremony took place in May and was a real experience, according to Wright. "I had a lump in my throat, I did," she recalled. "This really opens some doors to me."

And, so far, what's one of her favorite benefits of being an American citizen?

"My co-workers used to be funning me all the time about being a 'foreigner,'" she laughed. "Now they can't do that anymore!"

Car fires are very dangerous electrical wiring. When there is a short circuit, the electric locks and electric windows fail to operate.

It's very important that you get out of your car quickly in case the passenger compartment fills with smoke.

If the engine sputters or you feel the engine bogging down, you may have an engine fire. Pull over to the side of the road and get out of the car to investigate.

Be careful when raising the hood. Don't confuse the steam from a broken radiator hose with a car fire. A broken radiator hose will put off very hot steam and will dissipate into the atmosphere. Smoke will not dissipate fast.

If you smoke, use the ash tray. That's what it's for. Many people flip their cigarettes out the window and they blow back into the back seat.

You can reduce the amount of damage by fire if you keep a small ABC dry powder fire extinguisher in the trunk of your automobile.

You can purchase one of these fire extinguishers on sale for about $7.

Place the extinguisher in the trunk in an easily accessible position and check the gauge periodically.

Read the manufacturer's instructions on how to operate it as soon as you purchase it.

Virginia Beach's Dozier wins at Langley

Buddy Dozier, of Virginia Beach, and Tony Steele, of Williamsburg, won Saturday's twin 20-lap Grand Stock feature races at Langley Speedway, races that could be called just about anything but ordinary.

The twin features had their share of normal bumps and grinds, plus penalties ranging from one lap to the remainder of the year.

Dozier won the first race when he took over on lap 17 and beat Mitch Sarvis, of Norfolk, to the wire. Buddy Hyatt, of Newport News, was third, Mike Sprinkel, of Virginia Beach, fourth and Steele fifth. But the race was marred by an incident involving Danny Baker, of Hampton. After an early spin with Charlie Daniels, of Hampton, Baker ignored numerous black flags shown by NASCAR officials because of loose metal hanging from the left front fender. He was later disqualified and then barred from competition at Langley for the rest of the year because of subsequent actions off the track.

In the second Grand Stock feature Steele picked up his second victory of the year, with Dozier finishing second. Daniels placed third with Robert Tollenare, of Hampton, fourth and Buddy Carroll, of Virginia Beach, fifth. In this race points leader Buddy Hyatt was held back a lap after a tangle with Sarvis on the backstretch.

Roger Sawyer, of Chesapeake, once again dominated the Late Model Stock Car 50-lap feature. He took the pole with a 16.765 docking over the .395 mile oval, the fastest of the year. Then Sawyer led all 50 laps winning over Phil Warren, of Chesapeake, giving him 10 victories for the season. Danny Edwards, Jr., of Poquoson, was third, with Randy Hutchinson, of Seaford, fourth and Terry Harris, of Hampton, fifth.

The 20-lap All-American race was every bit as wild as the Grand Stock duo. Jeff Applewhite, of Chesapeake, won, but was disqualified when he refused to allow officials to examine his car. That gave the win to Tommy Hoggard, of Hampton, with John Hicks, of Hampton, second; Kenny Webster, of Norfolk, third; Paul Lubno, of Hampton, fourth, and Chuck Terry, of Hampton, fifth. In this race veteran driver Henry Klich, of Hampton, was disqualified, also for refusing to obey a black flag, as was Robert Dozier, of Hampton.

The Mini-Stock 20-lapper went pretty much according to form. Buddy Malish, of Hampton, won the pole in qualifying and stayed in front of Milton Herring, of Newport News, to capture his ninth victory of the year. Robert White, of Virginia Beach, was third with Ski Kozakowski, of Chesapeake, fourth, and John Howard, of Hampton, fifth.

DeDonna attends special woodwind seminar in Pa.

Clarinetist Anthony DeDonna of Virginia Beach recently received three days of instruction and training from the principal clarinetist of The Philadelphia Orchestra, Anthony Gigliotti, at Temple University's Sixth Annual Woodwind seminar.

Gigliotti, Richard Woodhams, Bernard Garfield and Murray Panitz, four of the world's most brilliant woodwind players, hosted workshops and master classes at Temple's New School Institute for more than 30 young musicians.

All principal players in The Philadelphia Orchestra, the four musicians are artists-in-residence at Temple's Boyer College of Music and members of the acclaimed Philadelphia Woodwind Quintet.

The intensive three-day seminar also will offer instrument repair clinics and instrument-related studies such as reed making. Other classes will concentrate on solo and/or orchestral repertoire and technical problems.

Time has been reserved for practice and group activities. An open panel discussion on career planning has been added.

Tree guidelines committee formed in Virginia Beach

A committee composed of many different professionals interested in tree preservation in the state's largest city has been formed.

This is a followup to last winter's joint move by Tidewater Builders Association and Virginia Beach Tomorrow to establish a set of voluntary guidelines for developers in the city.

The committee will attempt to define clearly the overall ecological needs and create planning that will address the long-range benefits for the city on a number of points.

John Y. Richardson, an attorney, is chairman of the committee. "We expect to have preliminary guidelines in 45 days, with a final proposal completed within the following 60-day period," he said.

Other members include Eddie Barnes, city director of landscape services; Tim Barrow, chairman, Resort Area Advisory Commission; Joe Bagrier, engineer and surveyor for Bagrier Associates, B. H. "Pat" Bridges, landscape architect, E. T. (Joe) Buchanan, Virginia Beach Tomorrow steering committee chairman and Claudia Cotton, TBA director of government and technical affairs.

Phil Davenport, city public works administrator, Doug DuCharme, architect for Krummell & Jackson, Judy Dockery, attorney and Planning Commission member, Roger Huff, city arborist, Council Member Reba McClanahan, Council Member Nancy Parker, Channing Pfeiffer, TBA executive vice president, Michael Rashkind, developer for R & J Associates One, Bill Schlimgen, engineer for Talbot & Associates, Douglas Talbot, TBA president, Don Trueblood, city engineer, Bart Tuthill, city soil scientist and Jack Whitney, city chief of comprehensive planning.

"Trees assist in the ecological cycles which directly bear upon both the soil and water problems peculiar to our community and constitute an economic benefit measured in both increased esthetic value and dollars," said Richardson. "We have a keen interest in preserving our landscapes and have the type of volunteer support on this committee that will allow us to create guidelines that work for everyone."

Two subcommittees, have been formed.

A drafting subcommittee will study how voluntary guidelines can address the problems of tree protection and make an inventory of existing solutions to the situation in other communities.

An education subcommittee will determine how the guidelines are disseminated to the general public and building industry — including builders, subcontractors and others associated with the trade.

Joe Buchanan is chairman, with Claudia Cotton and Eddie Barnes also serving.

Ruffing selected to alcoholism board

Leo G. Ruffing has been selected as a member of the board of directors of the Tidewater Council on Alcoholism.

Ruffing, program director of the Heritage chemical dependency unit at Humana Hospital Bayside, in Virginia Beach, was formerly education director and director of employee assistance for the council.

He was also on the board of directors of the Flynn Christian Fellowship Home in Portsmouth, where he was involved in developing the program and became the first program director for the Regional Residential Alcohol Program, a 30-bed facility that is a joint effort of the Portsmouth, Norfolk, Chesapeake, Western Tidewater and Virginia Beach community service boards.

A resident of Churchland, Ruffing is a minister of the Christian Church (Disciples of Christ) and was associate minister of Park View Christian Church for five years. He also served as chaplain with the Virginia State Guard, George Washington Division, and retired from the Air Force in 1970. He has a wife, Theresa, and a son, Michael.

Hinkle speaks at district convention

Maurice Brinkley, a local elder of Jehovah's Witnesses, reported that Virginia Beach area members recently returned from attending a three-day convention attended by 8,965 members held at the Hampton Coliseum in Hampton, Va.

James Hinkle, an elder with the Ocean congregation in Virginia Beach, spoke on the subject, "Practice Giving in Full Measure."

He encouraged all present to imitate the example of their God Jehovah, who "gives even to those that do not recognize him as Almighty." He then posed the question: "How can we show appreciation? By living up to our dedication, which includes telling others about God's Kingdom and the blessings it will bring."

The featured address on Sunday was entitled "In Our Fearful Times, Whom Can You Really Trust?" It was delivered by Charles V. Creech, convention overseer.

After proving by world events just how insecure our modern times are, he stated: "Trust is a victim of the modern trend. Distrust is taking its place."

But he pointed out that we can trust God, Jehovah, to deliver his people through these trying times.
